there were some excuse for the angry thoughts that disturbed Mrs. Middleton's mind every time Sam's wife, dressed like a fine lady, smiled blandly upon her and wished her "good day!" Was the poor woman so very wrong when she argued that Mrs. Barlow sat upon her chairs, dined off her joints, and wore her dresses? All she knew was that if things were what they ought to be, and if Jack was what he once promised to be, her life would be a vast deal brighter than it was at present. And now the Foundry was closed and her husband out of work!

While this cruel fact was hammering itself into the mind of Mrs. Middleton, Jack staggered into the room and gave it the final blow. Drink had stupified him, or he would have been terrible in his rage. As it was, he stood for a few seconds with a dark scowl upon his face, and presently said—

Wife, I'm off. We're all discharged. It may be weeks before there's a chance of any work in this place. You must do your best—and I'll do the same.

He was gone. No comforting word; no kind farewell; no parting kiss. Oh! how unlike the Jack of a few months ago! Drink had done its brutalizing work; and thought, conscience, and feeling seemed gone for ever. Another paroxysm of grief shook the weak frame of the heart-broken woman; and for the space of fully an hour she succeeded sob. Through all this little Jack—for this was his name—slept peacefully on.

A month passed. Mrs. Middleton had only once heard any tidings of her husband. A neighbor's son had seen him some thirty miles away, breaking stones upon the roadside. Jack told him that he had heard there was a likelihood of the Foundry being opened again, and that he intended hastening home as soon as the report was confirmed. In his absence his wife had received sympathy and help from the family of Mr. Williams, the preacher at the Mission-room which stood a few yards down the street.

It was about seven o'clock in the evening. Mrs. Middleton had put her child to sleep, and had hastened around the corner to buy a few necessities at the neighboring chandler's shop. She had only left the house a few seconds when the latch of the door quietly lifted, and Jack seated himself upon an old chair by the fire. He was tired and dusty. Nothing had passed his lips since the early morning; and he was consequently in a much more sober condition than when he started forth in quest of employment a month ago. He had only sat a minute or two when a slight noise from the corner of the room made him aware that he was not alone. Jack Middleton, jr., was awake.

Hullo! exclaimed Middleton, sen., here's the young'un! Come out, you rascal, and let your dad have a look at you.

And lifting the child carefully from the old clothes basket, Jack placed him upon his knee. Now was the critical moment. Would the baby cry at the strange, gruff voice? Had he done so, I fear I should not have had the pleasure of relating this story; for it is highly probable that he would have been hastily dropped into the basket, and the Green Dragon would again have welcomed its old customer. Would you believe it, reader? Middleton, jun., looked with his bright blue eyes into the begrimed face of Middleton, sen., and actually laughed!—laughed a real, hearty, baby-laugh—as much as to say, Dad, old boy, what a satisfactory thing it is that you and I understand one another so well!

A faint smile—the first for many a day—stole across the features of the wretched man. Still looking into the face of his boy, Jack began to think. Could it be possible, he asked himself, that he, too, was once a pure babe like this little one he was now nursing? Sure enough, it must have been so—and his thoughts wandered back to his childhood; back to his native village; back to the old thatched cottage; back to his mother's death-bed. Presently a tear escaped unbidden from his eye, and stole, as if half afraid, down his rough, hairy cheek. It was followed by another, and yet another. Jack Middleton, jun., opened his blue eyes and stared with blank astonishment. But his father saw nothing—heard nothing.

Things had not long taken this serious turn before Mrs. Middleton returned, out of breath to her home. Imagine her surprise at the strange scene that met her view. Jack home again! the baby on his knee! and the man of a hundred fights crying like a school girl! Her amazement robbed her of speech. Like an angel of God, she announced her presence to her weeping husband by a kiss upon his forehead.

Wife, lass, said Jack, with a voice quivering with emotion, I've come back.

So I see, Jack, she replied.

Wife, lass, continued the man, I've been a fool and a brute.

Mrs. Middleton, not being in a position to truthfully contradict this piece of information, said nothing. She simply gave her husband another kiss, and at the same time took Middleton, jr., into her arms, and began to prepare his bed in the clothes-basket.

Quite three minutes elapsed before another word was spoken. Jack was steadily gazing into the few embers that glowed upon the hearth.

I want to see Williams, the Bible-man, he presently muttered.

I need not relate all that passed on that eventful evening within that poverty-stricken cottage. When the missionary whispered, Good-night; God bless you! to Mrs. Middleton, the angels in Heaven were rejoicing over another repentant sinner. Jack had given his heart to Jesus; had signed the pledge; and had allowed his delighted wife to pin a piece of blue ribbon upon his coat.

It was Sunday afternoon. Two well-known figures were seen making their way towards the waste piece of ground that lay in the front of the Green Dragon. These were Mr. Williams and his new convert. What a contrast to the drunken bully of a month ago! The glow of pure joy flushed his cheek; the light of youth had returned to his eye; and the clean face and respectable dress were outward manifestations of the inward change.

A large crowd had already gathered; for the news of Jack's conversion had been the chief topic of interest for some days past; and it had been announced that on this occasion he desired to say a few words to his old mates. A murmur ran through the multitude as Middleton, Bible in hand, stepped forward. There was no need to call silence. Not a sound could be heard save the sobs of Mrs. Middleton, who stood behind the speaker with her baby in her arms.

Lads, said Jack, in a clear though subdued voice, hearken to me. You all know Jack Middleton. You all know what I was—a poor, wretched, drunken, fighting, swearing fool. Lads, I've turned over a new leaf. I'm here to tell you that if you want me in future you'll find me at the Mission, and not at the Green Dragon.

And drawing up his huge form to its full height, and raising his voice to the utmost, he shouted, Not another farthing of my money goes into the pocket of Sammy Barlow! God helping me, my lass shall never have occasion to shed another tear on my account; and she's coming out next Sunday in a bonnet as good as Mrs. Barlow's best. That's straight! Mary, my girl, hand us up the young'un.

Mrs. Middleton placed the baby in his father's arms; and holding the child up before the crowd, Jack related in his own rough-and-ready way the story of his conversion. The impression made that day upon the hearts of many was deep and lasting; while the anger of Mr. Barlow and his gaudily-dressed spouse knew no bounds.

Jack has stuck to his word. His home is now as bright and happy as once it was desolate and wretched. He has been promoted at the Foundry and now holds a very respectable position in the town. His wife is the happiest of women as she walks arm-in-arm with her husband every Sunday to the Mission Chapel. And Jack Middleton, jr., is now a chubby-faced little member of the infant's class in the Sunday school.—British Workman.

TEMPERANCE NEWS AND NOTES

To wreck a train is a crime, but to wreck a human soul is a privilege that the state sells.—California Voice.

In the Samoan Conference the prohibition of intoxicating liquors and firearms was one of the articles agreed upon.

Baron Liebig, the German chemist, says that "as much flour as can lie on the point of a table knife contains as much nutritive constituents as eight quarts of the best and most nutritious beer that is made."

Rum in the United States makes more than 12,000 funerals of inebriates every day, and you help pay for the coffins and grave-diggers; you pay for the board, washing and clothes of men who stagger out from the rum saloons to fight or shoot or debauch society and are imprisoned.

To use leisure for carousing, to fire the blood with alcohol, to dwarf and waste men's substance in the close and fetid air of a bar-room, is not recreation; it is physical damnation," is the strong way in which the Chicago Times puts it.

George W. Clark says in the Christian Cynosure; Out of 600 convicts in Auburn State-Prison, 500 confessed being led astray first by tobacco; then to liquor, then to crime; then to prison! Tobacco, alcohol and opium are a trio of devils in the work of be-numbing deadening and destroying the moral sensibilities.

Governor Francis dealt the saloons of Missouri the most severe blow they have ever received when he signed the Newberry bill. The bill prohibits music, cards, dice, billiard tables, pool tables, bowling alleys and boxing gloves in saloons. Three thousand saloons in St. Louis and Kansas City will have to change their mode of doing business.
