UNEQUALLED QUALITIES

OF THE
DOHERTY ORGAN,

As the following testimonial will show.
 MESSRS. THOMPSON & CO.
 Gentlemen:—After a thorough examination of several organs manufactured by Messrs. Doherty & Co., for which you are the General Agent, I have much pleasure in stating that the result has been most satisfactory. The tone is good and the touch faultless, and I have no hesitation in saying that they are deserving of the high reputation they have already attained.

ROBBERS OF TIME.—Idle men and women who themselves have plenty of leisure, too often forget that the worker's time represents money. Many of them are highly respectable and well-meaning persons; time being of little value to themselves, they have no knowledge of the value of hours and minutes to others, and they call and waste time, every moment of which is golden to the people who suffer the theft. Sensible men and women who know the value of time to the busy workers, are welcome everywhere. Whether they come on business or in kindly offices of friendship, they never steal the time they can't return. If they have business, it is promptly transacted, and they are as welcome in their coming as in their going. If they call to exchange the greetings which keep green the noble attributes of friendship, they throw their bright ray of sunshine over the worker and then depart regretted. These are not the thieves of the worker's time. On the contrary, they give much and take little; but they are only a small portion of those who claim the time of busy people. There is hardly a banker, merchant, manufacturer, professional man, editor, or any others of the many workers of the world, who are not daily victimized more or less by the thieves of valuable time. They have existed since the world was, and it is probable that they will continue until time shall be no more.

A PRACTICAL LESSON.—The following incident shows what one man can do in the way of local improvements if he be so disposed: As I was starting out for a walk one day with my three little children, the eldest one, not quite five years of age, stooped and picked up a stone that lay in the road, saying, as he threw it aside, "I'll get that stone out of the way so as to have the sidewalk all clear when Bessie Brigham's papa comes along on his bicycle. I said to myself, 'You have caught that trick of thoughtfulness from your papa. Only a few days afterward my boy's father was, in company with other members of a commission, making a tour of inspection around a certain reservoir, when he saw one of his companions throw aside a stone that lay in the path. There, said my husband, touching him on the shoulder, that's what I am teaching my boys to do. On our long Sunday tramps, through country roads, they are learning to clear the paths of sticks and stones. I will tell you how I learned to do it, replied the other. When I entered Harvard one of the conditions of my going to college was, that I should board at home in Brookline, and walk the four miles to Cambridge and back each morning and night. The roads at first were very stony, but wishing to study as I walked, I began clearing away the stones, that I might step without looking off my book, and by the time that I had succeeded, the habit of removing obstructions had become so strong that it has clung to me ever since.

UNINTENDED CRUELTY.—Nowhere are better opportunities for the exercise of tact afforded than in a sick room; and nowhere are so many cruel speeches made—unconsciously, no doubt; but that does not alter the fact, or make them easy to bear. You will find, if ill for several weeks, that some of your best friends will study your appearance and report with startling frankness: "Why, my dear, how you have changed! I really don't believe I should have known you. You are paler, or more unnaturally flushed, as the case may be, since I was here last; and, yes, you have perceptibly lost flesh. But you must get well. We love you too much, we can't get on without you." This is said with the kindest meaning, but to the "pale sick body" it means faintness or increased fever, or a cry after the visitor has departed. A clergyman once asked a dear old gentleman who was seriously ill, but by no means anxious to die, "Does the grave look pleasant to you, dear brother?" By the bedside of a sensitive woman attacked with pneumonia, heard a most benevolent woman say, in clear tones, "There is no hope. I see the death mark on her face." Imagine the effect of this on the sufferer! If the visitors number two or three—this, of course, in cases where the patient is not very ill—conversation, instead of turning upon the cheerful and engrossing topics of the time, is too apt to be fastened to your own condition, and instances are given of Mr. So-and-so, who died of the same, or Miss This-or-that, who at last recovered, but has never been her old self since. We all know how the imagination acts upon the body, even producing death in a perfectly healthy person. Then how careful we should be in a sick room.

VULGARISMS.—Girls are actually chewing gum again, and in public places, too! If they could look accidentally into a mirror, while tasking the lower part of the face so unmercifully, and see themselves for a moment with unrecognizing eyes, the vulgar habit would die on the spot, as will their beauty if they persist in it. I wonder if the man exists who could connect romance with a gum chewing girl? There's something intensely prosaic in anything that suggests eating, even if it be only the munching of candies at matinees, concerts and lectures. The vulgarity of the act, in any public place whatever, is apparent at a glance—vulgarity of bad taste, of appetite, and of the display of eating, as well as the scattering of the redolence of the candies upon the atmosphere in many instances; the habit, also, being one which has inspired the witty pencils of many among our eminent caricaturists. But gum chewing is infinitely worse than candy munching, and has not even the advantage of satisfying the appetite. Don't transgress in this way at all, girls; but if your mind insists upon being engrossed by some sort of chewing, at least draw the line at gum.

ALWAYS COMPLAINING.—If one is ailing, nothing is gained by constant complainings, while the comfort of others is seriously affected. Try to forget your pains; don't brood over them. Half of the suffering of nervous people comes from their brooding over their ailments till the imagination gets the upper hand. Nine times out of ten all their symptoms would disappear if they would pay strict attention to their diet, have it light and nutritious, and avoid stimulants of all kinds—even tea and coffee; bathe daily, using friction with a brush or towel; take plenty of outdoor exercise, whether the weather be pleasant or not; and try to forget their nerves in reading or pleasant company—not exciting company, for that would only irritate—or in congenial work; and if work they must, and it be not congenial, then let them make the best of it under the circumstances and do it by God's law, thoroughly and conscientiously; and they will be astonished to find how the sunshine will even seem brighter, the icy wind less cold, the noise less irritating and their friends so much pleasanter, when in reality it is all in themselves—they are only taking brighter views of life, and not causelessly irritating themselves and others around them.

MAKE THE EXPERIMENT.—Most people fall into the habit of exaggeration, and unconsciously make statements bordering closely upon falsehood. A family while at the breakfast table one morning pledged to observe the strictest veracity for that day. A member of the family tells the "consequence." As a first-fruit of the resolve, we asked the one who suggested it: "What made you so late at breakfast this morning?" She hesitated, began with "because I couldn't"—and then, true to her compact, said: "The truth is, I was lazy and did not hurry, or I might have been down long ago." Presently one of them remarked that she had been very cold, adding, "I never was so cold in my life." An inquiring look caused the last speaker to modify her statement instantly with: "Oh, I don't think I was so cold after all." A third remark to the effect that "Miss So-and-so was the ugliest girl in the city," was recalled as soon as made, the speaker being compelled to own that Miss So-and-so was only rather plain, instead of being excessively ugly. So it went on throughout the day, causing much merriment, which was good-naturedly accepted by the subjects, and giving rise to constant correction in the interest of truth. One thing became more and more surprising, however, to each one of us, and that was the amount of cutting down which our most careless statements demanded under this new law.

APPLE JELLY.—Apple jelly is delicious with custards and cakes, can be made at any time during the Winter. Take half a peck of juicy, tart apples, quarter and core, but do not pare them; put into a kettle with two lemons cut up with them and cover well with water. Let them cook until reduced to a pulp, then strain through a flannel bag. To every tumbler of juice add two-thirds of a tumbler of white sugar. Boil hard for twenty minutes, put in a glass and cover next day, covering the glasses with paper wet with flour paste.

SPONGE CAKE ROLL.—Take two teacups of sugar, two teacups sifted flour, two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder; into this break six good-sized eggs; beat all well together, turn into square jelly tins, and bake in a quick oven to a light brown. When done, turn out on a moulding board, and spread quickly with jelly; roll; roll carefully out, and wrap each roll in a clean napkin and serve. The eggs are not beaten separately, and the quicker the cake is put together the better it will be.

Mayonnaise dressing, made with the yolks of two raw eggs, stirred with the best olive oil added drop by drop, is the foundation of the best salad dressing.
 A good way to distinguish mushrooms is to sprinkle salt on the spongy or under side. If it turns yellow the specimen is poisonous; if black, it is wholesome.

JUST published, a new edition of Dr. Cullerwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure of Spermatorrhea or incapacity induced by excess or early indiscretion.
 The celebrated author, in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years' successful practice, that the alarming consequences of early error may be radically cured pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself chiefly, privately and radically.
