I MUST NOT DRINK.

If I would be a gentleman I cannot, must not drink; For that will cause all manliness Below the brute to sink.

If I would be a noble man I cannot, must not drink ; Or far from purity and truth I shall for ever shrink.

If I would be a useful man I cannot, must not drink; For will the idler drinking makes; Be helpful, do you think?

If I would be a Christian man I cannot, must not drink; Behold the wretched drunkard now." Trembling on ruin's brink

No; if I would be pure and good, And holy, true, and wise, I must not touch the poison-cup; 'Tis death in any guise. —Temperance Banner

RETRIBUTION.

"The Saloonist should be tried by the Levitical law, or that of strict justice-an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth."

Has e'er that ox been known to push, Or with his horns to gore Any woman, man or child, At any time before?

Mind then, that ox is to be stoned, His owner put to death. So is the crime to be aton'd-For thus the Scripture saith.

Has any man e'er dug a pit, Wherein a beast may fall? His money then shall pay for it, Upon the owner's call

Have the saloonists ruined men, And made them drunk and wild, Taking their earning, caused them then To murder wife and child?

Eye for an eye, tooth for a tooth Yes, let them have this law; In justice they should be pierced through, By the rough sword they draw.

How nany snares they daily spread, How many wiles employ, How many youths are easily led, By Satan's own decoy!!

The Great Refiner,

COPIED BY MRS. T. P. CATTON.

'Tis sweet to feel that he who tries] The silver takes his seat Beside the fire that purifies, Lest too intense a heat, Raised to consume the base alloy, The precious metal, too, destroy. 'Tis good to think how well he knows The silver's power to bear, The ordeal to which it gees; And that, with skill and care, He'll take it from the fire when fit | For his own hand to polish it.] Tis blessedness to know that he,

The piece he has begun, Will not forsake till he can see-To prove the work well done-An image, by its brightness shone, The perfect likeness of his own. But, ah! how much of earthly mould Dark relic of the mine, Lost from the ore must he behold;

The first faint semblance of his face? Thou Great Refiner! sit thou by,
Thy promise to fulfill;
Moved by thy hand, beneath thine eye,
And melted by thy will.
O, may thy work forever shine,
Reflecting beauty pure as thine.

How long must he refine,

Four Drinks.

Policeman Number Sixty-seven was an elder and more thoughtful man than is usually found on the municipal force. He was retained, in spite of his gray hairs, because of his staunch integrity. He was apt, in his leisure moments, to look below the misery and crime which came in his way, to find their cause.

I was once standing in front of Tuft's saloon, he said one day, when the bar-keeper set down a blue bottle on the counter, and said: There are just four drinks in that. It occurred to me I'd like to trace up them four drinks-where they went and what they did. Well, continued the policeman, a woman, got the first glass. She wasn't an old woman, nor used to whisky; about thirty years old, had been pretty once, and accustomed to having a gay time, I suppose. She was on her way home now from a day's hard work, tired and cold, and and theatre and fun. She turned handle not the unclean thing.

at the door of a snug, little house. I knew her husband Cratts, the carpenter, a cheerful, hard-working fellow. He opened the door and her baby ran out to meet her. She an oath. Her husband looked at her, and fell back as though he, too, had been struck. Then he picked up the the child and carried it into a pretty, ing stretched across the hearth as though she were dead. The second drink out of the bottle, the barkeeper told me, was given to old Stacy. He is nigh seventy, and soaked with liquor; blood, stomach and brain is poisoned by it. There's not a healthy atom of flesh left in his body, not a good feeling in his heart, nor manly thought in his head. The drink only helped, with all the liquor that he has drunk to kill him surely inch by inch. By this time I had got back to the saloon, and in a few minutes I saw a young man named Waters stop for the next. He had been drinking already; I called to him. I used to know Waters, a young clerk with a good salary; had a nice little home, and pretty wife and babies. He's quarrelsome in drink, and a glass or two upsets him. Waters, I said, don't drink that you've had enough.

But he laughed, took his drink, and went down the street. A few minutes later I heard a row going on Johnnie, take this pail and go and and followed him. They are a little ahead of him. I only traced up those four drinks; poverty and disgrace into some wretched, unfortunate home.-Youth's Companion.

DAVY.

A boy signed the temperance pledge. His mother said, Bring the brandy; I want some for these pies.

Davy obeyed. But as he went the thought came to him, Can I a temperance boy, carry a brandy jug? Hurrying back to the kitchen, he said, Mamma, I can't carry that brandy jug stir the batter while you go.

Without a word the mother gave went herself to bring the jug. She felt a strange, choking sensation in her throat; but she walked up those steps with a firm tread, and seized the jug. When she came down the dear little fellow was beating away at the dough. His eyes followed her as she went to the sink and began to empty out the contents of the jug.

A True Incident.

A family lived near us (and there are many such in New York) who were so poor they had to live in an attic room, and could not afford a struck it down to the ground with great many things that we consider to be necessary for our comfort.

It was so hot in their room in the summer time that the heat was almost unbearable, still they could not warm room. I saw the mother ly- afford an ice box, and of course they had no place to keep any milk, so they did without.

The father was dead, and the mother and children worked every day, but there was nothing to cheer them in their dingy room when they came home at night, so it became their custom to send out every evening after a pail of beer.

One evening the mother attended a Temperance meeting, when she became convinced that beer drinking was wrong and a needless waste of money, so she decided not to buy any more beer.

Several days afterwards her little boy said to her, Mother you don't know how glad I am that you have stopped buying beer, for I had begun to like it so well, that I used to be thinking about it all afternoon and kept wishing that six o'clock would come, so that I could go home, and then I would wish that seven o'clock would come so that supper would be over, for then you would say, Now

And mother, who knows but that shot him dead. Waters was sentenced I might have become a drunkard, if you had kept on getting the beer.

They stopped buying beer for good, and the result was that before long they had saved enough money to buy an ice box, so that they had a good
