nell addressed to his physicians were to request that they would not suffer the grave to be closed too promptly over his remains, as he was sure he should present the appearance of death before he breathed his last. His most ardent desire was to expire at Rome, with the blessing of Pope Pius IX., and in the course of his journey he had expressed the wish that, should he die on the road, his heart might at least be sent to the capital to the Catholic world. This thought had been suggested, as is said, by the recollection of Robert Bruce, who, just before he died, wished his heart to be conveyed to the Holy Land, and deposited in the Holy Sepulchre.

A Correspondent of the Times, in a letter dated Genoa, May 18, says :-

"Towards three, p. m., on Saturday, Mr. O'Connell called his own man, and, taking him warmly by both hands to acknowledge the rare fidelity with which he had served him, acknowledge the rare fidelity with which he had served him, he said, 'As yet, I am not dying;' but, two hours later, he called for the Rev. Dr. Miley (his chaplain), to whom he said, when he had bent down over him, the better to hear his fast sinking voice,—'I am dying, my dear friend!'

"The physicians were still in attendance; but, from that moment, the prayers and other offices of religion, which had not been interrupted from the preceding night, were pursued with redoubled earnestness by his friends and chief members of the clergy. At first his voice was united in the prayers and responses; but, as it became less and less distinct, his hands clasped in fervour—his eyes, his countenance, revealed how his soul responded to the litanies for the dying, which they were mingling with their tears around his bed.

"Occasionally, during this his last illness, as the brain became more and more invaded, there was a momentary wandering of the mind, from which, however, the slightest word recalled him. He never murmured, though his internal sufferings, at times at least, must been great. Every one was struck with his serenity, his recollection and fervour in receiving the last rites of religion. The adorable name of Jesus, and the prayer of St. Bernard to our blessed Lady, mingled from time to time with verses from the Psalms, and the most earnest and contrite aspirations, were almost perpetually upon his lips. Up to a few moments before he expired he continued to recognize his confessor, and fore he expired he continued to recognize his confessor, and to respond to his suggestions.

"His body is to be embalmed and conveyed to Ireland. His heart he bequeathed to Rome. The autopsy demonstrated singularly the correctness of the view taken of his case, and how wonderfully successful had been the remedies recomn ended in postponing the fatal event.

"His obsequies commenced from the moment of his decease, and are still continued with princely pomp in the church of our Blessed Lady delle Vigne. They are to close to-morrow with a grand requiem mass, at which his Excellency the Governor-General, the foreign Consols, and Mr. R. Cobden are invited to be present."

We have received the following report of the post mortem examination:—"The body was opened in the presence of Drs. Duff, Beretta, and Lacour, by Dr. Balleri, Surgeon-inchief of the Hospital for Incurables, in Genoa, 'who had been charged with the process of embalming the body of this great man." Lesions were observed in several organs. The right man. Lesions were observed in several organs. The right lung presented traces of chronic catarrh. The intestinal canal showed vestiges of former inflammation. More serious alterations were, however, observed in the brain. It was found gorged with blood throughout its entire extent, and partially softened. Its membranes were inflamed and thickened."

The body, upon its arrival at Dublin, (where preparations are making on a grand scale for its reception) is to be interred in the Church of St. Andrews, of which parish he was long a resident.

Fredericton, June 24th.—The weather here had been quite wet for several days, heavy rains having fallen, with warm weather at intervals. Such, we understand, has also been the case farther up the country. The streams have risen, and most of the lumber will be got to market. To-day the weather has been exceedingly fine. In the Counties of York and Carleton, we are informed, more than usual quantity of land has been planted, although in some districts not quite so many potatoes as usual, as from the severity of last winter they were fed to cattle, in such quantities as to leave certain farmers short of their seed .- Vegetation in this neighbourhood is very rapid. 'the Hay Crop is likely to be unusually heavy, and other crops, although planted late, bid fair to be abundant. Workmen were engaged yesterday and to-day, hanging three new bells in St. Anne's Church. The largest is between 400 and 500 lbs. They chime very agreeably.—The Court of Nisi Prius for York is now sitting; Judge Street presiding.

We have reason to believe that the Hon. Mr. Baillie is not well pleased at the publication of a jeau de sprit in the "Odd Fellow's Corner" of our last sheet, headed "A La Vellington." Are not the people of this Province a little too fastidious in their tastes? Now we are certain that the author of the article in question would be one of the last in the Province who would attack the Bishop personally,

1 hhd. Poland Blue Starch, snop personally, in any thing relating to his domestic circle, or private character; but at the same time, perhaps, he considered the foibles or eccentricities of public men, whoever they might be, legitimate subjects for an innocent jest. We do not think papers written in that style are at all calculated to lower a person in the estimation of the public, or we should not have admitted it in our columns.
