The cold weather which set in yesterday, will no doubt hurry to a close the river navigation for this year. There are three boats still running on the river, the Elaine, Hampstead, and Majestic. The latter is probably laid up in a few days. The captain of the Elaine reports that the river is still open for navigation, but he thinks that if this cold weather lasts, two or three days, will finish it.

THAT FOOTBALL MATCH THAT WAS NOT PLAYED.

Carleton and Neptunes Did Not Meet on the Shamrock Grounds this Afternoon and Manager Taylor of the Neptunes Tells Why.

There appears to be considerable difficulty in football circles, as regards the play, off in the intermediate league. The regular league games are finished, with the result that the Neptunes and Carleton teams are tied, for the Moore cup. In the regular course of events, the time of play off, would be decided by the league executive. There has been no meeting of the executive, however, to decide this matter.

S. H. Taylor, manager of the Neptunes, being asked as to why a meeting of the executive, was not held, said that as the Carleton team had expressed the desire to play on Thanksgiving day, it was thought by the president of the executive, that the two teams should play off on that day.

The Neptunes, up to 12 o'clock, Wednesday, were unable to get a team together. Mr. Taylor promptly informed Carleton to this effect. He also said that Capt. Watters of that team, on receiving this information, appeared to be considerably irritated and insinuated that the Neptunes were not desirous of playing the deciding game.

As late as eight o'clock, last night, Mr. Taylor says he made up his mind after consultation, with the captain of the Neptunes, and some of the club officials, that sooner than be accused of avoiding Carleton that some kind of a club team should be put on the field for Thanksgiving Day, and accordingly, informed Capt. Watters.

The latter said that was satisfactory to him. The announcement of the game was in consequence of this published in the morning papers.

In the face of this announcement, Mr. Taylor says, that today at 12 o'clock, he received word from Capt. Watters, that the games could not be played, because he (Watters), could not get all his men together.

Mr. Taylor says he will leave the football public to judge between the two teams.

STOVE REFUSED TO STAND FOR CHARLIE LUM'S SONG

So It Blew Up and Caused a Fire in the Brussels Street Laundry—Four Shirts Burned But Charlie Still Has the Button Holes.

Charlie Lum, will remember Thanksgiving day 1904, as a day when disaster, deep and dire, descended upon a scion of the noble house of Lum.

Charlie keeps a laundry on Brussels street where, in return for the coin of the realm he mauls soiled linen at so much a maul. Incidentally he plays fan tan, eats rice, is a duly registered citizen of St. John and a strong believer in the doctrine of Canada for all Chinese.

But Charlie is all but ruined and this is the how of it.

He had a fire in his washee shop this morning and before the hungry flames could be licked into submission four shirts were burned.

Charlie, was up early. He read the war news, burned a few bushel of paper prayers in the hope that his cousins in Japan might again upper cut the doughy Russ before the day ended and then prepared to add a few more tails to his store of worldly wealth.

He heated his irons and went to work. As he ironed a prayer and a thought of China into a particularly troublesome shirt he smiled a bland seraphic smile and sang softly in Chinese.

The gasoline stove, on which Charlie heats his irons sputtered out a warning.

"Muck a low chong chang ling lang b-r-r-r whizz allee samee, chop suey" sang Charlie.

Puff went the stove. Charlie was oblivious and continued his song even into the 48th and 49th verses.

Now, a self-respecting Canadian stove could be expected to stand 49 verses of a Chinese madrigal sung in the cracked tenor which Charlie possesses and gasoline stoves, are always uncertain quantities anyway.

After the excitement had quieted down, work in the laundry was resumed but Charlie sang no more.

He lost the shirts but he has four first class sets of button holes which he is prepared to sell cheap. He will gladly trade them for another shirt and will make no strenuous objection even if the shirt is soiled.

Then he put out the fire and started to count the damage.

At first it seemed as if the four shirts were completely destroyed but afterwards he found the button holes in perfect condition showing the superior fire proof quality of button holes.

Charlie's first thought was that Port Arthur had fallen and he was underneath.

Then he put out the fire and started to count the damage.
