TERRIFIC HEADACHE

Many people complain, in the United States, of the inconvenience caused by the tax on income, and on personal property and goods.

If the business tax could be increased, and if a reasonable income tax could be levied, so as to reach a large number of persons who profit by the advantages which the city affords, without contributing to its revenue, I think this would be the most practical mode of taxation and the most likely to meet the approval of the Legislature.

There are some persons who claim that the real estate tax might be increased by 25 cents, and the business tax by 2½ cents, and the business tax by 2½ cents, and the business tax by 2½ cents, and that this would be sufficient.

There are also indirect means of relieving the city, such as compelling
