The captain stated that the vessel had been in port about ten days, that Reid had been absent part of each day, and in most instances without permission. He told the captain that he was sick and wanted to see a doctor. The captain allowed him to go, but Reid failed to obtain medical advice. He said that although he had been here before, he did not know where to find a doctor.

When questioned by the magistrate, Reid denied having been absent from the vessel without leave. He admitted having refused duty yesterday morning, and said that he was unable to work because he was sick.

"Don't you think that's too thin?" asked the magistrate. "You went ashore to find a doctor and didn't succeed because, you say that you didn't know where to find one. You could have gone to the captain and collector Dunn.
