One feature of the day was the great good humor which prevailed. Under such trying conditions, nobody seemed to get flurried, and the police never showed up so well in regulating the traffic, helding back the vehicles to allow the crowds to cross the English Channel from the French coast. The principal of the survival of the fittest, adopted by English breeders, would doubtless lead to a strain especially adapted for flying under the conditions mentioned.

But, bad as it was in the city, even worse conditions prevailed in the suburbs. Brilliantly lighted shops in Clapham, for instance, were quite ments, and the center of the streets was impenetrable blackness.

Shopkeepers, much to their consternation, had to stop delivering their Christmas orders either by van or by hand, and some bus drivers in despair had to give up even leading their horses, and had to tell their horses, and had to tell their passengers they could risk going no farther.
