A Man's Mistake.

Y God! My God! was all the without?" he queried. stricken, excited man could murmur audibly, and the words came out from his lips blasphemily. was the response. He pressed the slight form of an infant trembling visibly, like one in an ague, as are many good, pure people. Do you he gazed upon the receeding form of a never wish to go out of this place?" he woman, and that woman his wife.

He was standing beside the track of the A. and N. railway, that crossed the and from the track he had just snatched what more could I desire?" this child as the great fiery engine dart-

"She must be crazed," he muttered at last. 'God forgive her-she is a murderess at heart."

He wrapped the child in his coat and strove forward like one demented. Five years married and this was the end, the bitter end, and nothing to lighten its g'oom. Six years before he had become fascinated by the beautiful face of a noted songstress, and after a brief courtship, they married. But used to excitement life palled upon her taste, and she became forward. restless; from that time her existence was scarcely endurable, for she fretted an old lover appeared upon the scene, and there were many meetings of which on the intruder. her husaand knew naught. The birth of her child enraged her, and she hated the tiny being because it looked up to her with it's fathers glowing eyes, and scarcely ever looked upon it. On this night her husband had learned all her falsity and upbraided her in terms that a jealous heart and an enraged honor dictated : she vowed to him that she would leave then and there, that she had intended to do so, but before leaving she would have a revenge that would burn into his heart like hot iron.

Her demoniac looks of fury alarmed him, and he watched her closely. About midnight he saw her steal forth from the house, something in her arms pressed closely to her. He crept out and followed stealthily. She took the most unfrequented streets until she reached the edge of the town, advanced to the car track-the midnight freight train was already in view-and threw her burden directly in front of the great destroyer. One feeble wail broke from the infant's lips, and the horrified father just had time to spring forward and catch the child from its perilous position before the train thundered by.

From that night the fate of that unhappy family was bathed in mystery-they had all vanished, as it were, from the world at large, and years came and went ; tidings reached Haughtonville from either of the trio, until their existence was almost forgotten by all who had once been relatives and friends.

Haughtonville, sprang from his horse, fettered him to a tree, and prepared to solve a mystery.

"The Tangle" was a name given to large, and what seemed impenetrable thicket, that had originally belonged to the Haughton estate, though lying some miles away fr. m any inhabitable building. About the time of the disappearance o the party mentioned in the beginning of the story, it had been sold to a stranger, and cards were posted all around it warning strangers off the premises. There was no need to warn the old residents of Haughtonville, for long, long years before a young Haughton and a friend had been murdered there, and the place had been avoided as uncanny ever since.

Guy Haughten smiled to himself now as he prepared to enter, thinking how all his boyhood days he had avoided the spot as he would a pestilence. He tied a piece of firm cord to the outside edge, and carried the ball in his hand, a precaution he cong.atulated himself upon taking after he had penetrated few rods, for he found it the most unaccountable, mystifying maze of trees he had ever encountered. It was almost as one another at the top, and the very air of the place was close and unhealthy.

"I think I will go no further," he soliloquized at last, sick of the adven- more!"

"I do not believe I shall discover any- come involuntarily from her lips. thing but some black, slimmy pool to repay me for my trouble," when suddenly a sound burst upon his ears that startled him. It was the voice of a womana glorius, rich, sweet voice, with tones softer and clearer than anything he had ever heard before. He rubbed his eyes in a dazed, bewildered manner. "I must be dreaming," he muttered. "I cannot he under the palace of some enchanted 'incess?"

But no, his ears did not deceive him ; the voice arose stronger and clearer than ever, rippling like a bird in notes that showed cultivation as well as natural talent.

"I must see the singer," he cried. "By gad, this adventure will be something worth while after all." He kept on his way until the light grew brighter, and then a scene burst on his sight that would never be forgotten. The centre of the "Tangle" had been completely cleared away, and the sun shone down in dazzling brilliancy upon a small log hut, completely covered by vines and flowers. In a little arbour sat a beautiful girl, her lap filled with flowers that her busy flugers were making into a boquet, while on her shoulder a tame robin perched, seemingly charmed by the bursts of melody that rippled from her lovely lips. She was bewilderingly lovely, and he stood like one enchanted until she raised her eyes and discovered his presence. She sprang from her seat swiftly, scattering the blossoms at her feet, and frightening her feathered friend. Her eyes dilated, her lips quivered, and sle said in terrified tones:

'How came you here? O, my father will be so angry?"

Guy resumed his naturally courtly manner, and bowed low. "I beg your pardon," he said, in his most pleasing tones," for this intrusion. I was not aware that the tangle was inhabited, and only your charming voice has led to the discovery."

She looked at him, curiously, earnestly, and he thought what a strange girl she seemed.

'Surely you do not live here always alone?' he was prompted to inquire. 'I never left the tangle," she respond. ed, "and yours is the only face besides my father's that I ever looked upon.

"Impossible!" Guy cried, in a bewildered tone. He could not comprehend it; it was too strange a thing to be

"Then you know nothing of the world "Nothing save that is a world of sin,"

"In some respects it is," he auswered against his broad breast convulsively, slowly, "but all are not sinful; there

"Never; I am happy here, was the innocent reply. "I have the sunshine, e ige of the little town of Haughtonville, the flowers, the birds and my dear father;

Guy was struck by the purity of her language; she was not ignorant.

"You must have had a teacher?" he said curiously. "My father has taught me," was the reply. "We are all in all to one an-

A silence fell upon them. Guy was too surprised to be very loquacious; in all his life he had never met so perfect and vet so child-like a womon before.

At that moment footsteps fell upon and adulation, the quiet routine of their his ear, and the strange girl made a rush

"My father !"

"Adelia!" fell from his lips, as he against the bonds that bound her. Then pressed her close to him, and stood with blanched face and trembling lips; gazed

"How came you here sir?" he questioned sternly of Guy.

"I have to beg your pardon," the young man replied, impelled to honor the grey haired hermit, who stood before him in kingly pride. "I knew I was disobeying orders by seeking to explore the Tangle, but I had no idea it contained a private residence, or 1 should not have taken the liberty. You will pardon me, I hope, when I tell you I am Guy Haughton, of Haughtonville, and the Tangle used to be a part of the old Haughton

"I am aware of it," was the response. ou will never reveal to mortal, my presence here, nor ever repeat this visit."

'I promise," Guy responded solemly, and at the same time in all sincerity. "If you break your word I shall be forced to seek some other shelter." the old man continued. "I fled to this refuge from the world to keep my one little lamb in innocence and ignorance. This is her home-she is happy here, pray do not seek to make her otherwise

"I promise," Guy repeated again, and bowing low to the hermit and his lovely there places were filled by others, and no daughter, he retraced his steps and mounted his impatient beast. After he had disappeared from sight, the hermit held his daughter closer to him. "My darling! my darling!" he Sixteen years later Guy Haughton, of cried as though she was in deadly danger. 'I hope you will forget that intruder,"

"I will try," was the frank response, but father was he not beautiful? The old man shuddered.

"Forget him, my child, forget him,' he ejaculated.

From that day he never mentioned Guy's name, but it was ever present in Alida's mind. She repeated it over to her birds, she whispered it to the flowers and she dreamed of it by night. Who clould blame her, for Guy Haughten, had won many hearts in the gay world where he was surrounded by other gentle.

Poor child, she thought not what this the several assimilative organs of the innocent worship meant. She was only happy in her own dreams. Raising her eyes one day, she gave another cry. Her father had gone to the neighboring town of Clay, which lay on the opposite side of the Tangle, on his usual visit for provisions, and here Guy Blaughton stood before her, despite his solemn promise

"Forgive me," he cried, in thrilling tones. "I am mad to venture here against your father's express command, dark as night, the boughs so interlaced but I cannot delp it. I have dreamed of you continually, you have not left me day or night, until I could not resist the pleasure of looking upon your face once operation, moving the bowels surely and without pain. Although gentle in their operation, they are still the most thorough and tic medicine that can be employed: cleansing the stomach and bowels, and even the blood. In small doses of one pill a day, they stimulate the digestive organs and promote vigorous health. AYER'S PILLS have been known for more than a quarter of a century, and have obtained a world-wide reputation for their virtues. They correct diseased action in body, and are so composed that obstructions within their range can rarely withstand or evade them. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of every-body, but also formidable and dangerous diseases that have baffled the best of human skill. While they produce powerful effects, they are, at the same time, the safest and best physic for children. By their aperient action they gripe much less than the common purgatives, and never give pain when the bowels are not inflamed. They reach the vital fountains of the blood, and strengthen the system by freeing it from the elements of weakness. Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates, containing neither calomel nor any deleterious drug, these Pills may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar-coating preserves them ever fresh, and makes them pleasant to take; while being purely vegetable, no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.
