A Race for Life.

(Concluded.)

WHEN I awoke I was surrounded by a score of Indian warriors—Navajoes—a fire was burning near me, and the sun was shining brightly.

I was lying upon a blanket, and upon attempting to move, discovered that my limbs were stiff and sore.

I was bewildered, but in a few minutes the events of the previous night came to my mind, and my first thoughts were of my comrade. With an effort, I raised my head and glanced around, when, to my relief, I saw Brady sitting near me. His first expression was:

'By the Holy Saint Patrick, the redskins have got us this time.'

'It would have been far better for us,' I replied, 'if we had been completely frozen before they discovered us.'

'Away with such stuff,' he cried. That's not the kind of talk for one who has been so long accustomed to the life of a frontiersman.

"While the lamp holds on to burn,
The vilest sinner may return,"

says your sacred poet, and we will escape those dogs yet.'

'Do be cautious. There may be some of them who understand enough of our language to know of what we are talking,' I replied.

'Not a bit of it,' he responded: 'but they mean mischief, and we must be on the alert.'

The chief of the band then indicated to us that our conversation must stop and at the same time one of the warriors came and bound Brady's hands. I suppose they considered me too powerless to escape, so they left me unbound.

How it was that I had not escaped as well as my comrade, and how we had been discovered by the Indians was more than we were ever able to find out. Brady's first knowledge was of being dragged along in the snow before daylight, and placed before the fire. He was not frozen except his hands and feet slightly, while my lower limbs to my knees, and my hands, arms, nose and ears were severely frost-bitten. But my limbs had been placed in snow, and I was recovering very well, though exceedingly sore and in much pain.

Brady had considerable knowledge of the Navajo language, and I felt satisfied he had learned something regarding their intentions toward us, so I made several efforts during the day to get something from him, but he would not answer a question.

They gave us roast meat, and, although they were very cruel, their treatment was much better than I expected.

When night came, Brady was tied hand and foot, and my arms and legs were tied; but I was not confined any further, so I rested pretty well during the night.

In this way they kept us for one week, making us do menial service during the day, and binding us during the night, and all this time I could get nothing from my comrade. He would not talk to me at all. I knew he had a reason, for it, and felt contented, so far as he was concerned, but I could not keep from chafing under my savage yoke.

On the evening of the eigth day, Brady, by the use of the deaf and dumb alphabet, communicated to me the following: 'We must make our escape to-night! Don't sleep! Moquis!'

The Moqui villages lay about forty-five miles north of where we then were, and the inhabitants have always been friendly to the whites. They are, to a certain extent, an agricultural people, and claim to be descendants of the old Atec race, who inhabited Mexico when Cortez invaded that country. If we could reach these Moquis we would be safe. But the snow was deep, and in many places drifted, and the country strange to us, while it was well known to our captors, who had been lying there for more than a week, ever since the storm, unwilling to attempt to get back to their own villages, the route to which lay within fifteen miles of the Moqui villages. But my only thoughts were of escape, and I felt willing to trust to my friend's judgement in this case.

Night came on, and the horses, twenty-four in number, were brought up and tied near the camp. We were tied as usual, but there was no more communication of any kind between Brady and myself. My anxiety was such as I never felt before. It seemed to me that the Indians would never retire, and, when they did lay down, they were a long time getting quiet. But as soon as I was sure they were all asleep, I began working to free myself. My hands were tied behind my back, and my feet bound close together. My wrists and arms were yet much swollen from the effects of the frost, and, by exerting every effort and suffering intensely, I succeeded in drawing my right hand through the thong, lacerating my hand and tearing away portions of the flesh as I did so. Having loosed my hands, it was but a small matter to untie my feet. As soon as this was done, I raised myself to reconnoitre. One of the Indians moved uneasily. I sat down and placed my feet and hands in the proper position, almost instantly. The Indian got up, stirred the fire, and again lay down. Great drops of sweat stood upon my forehead, but I lay as still as death. After half an hour I again made the attempt. Brady lay perfectly quiet. My situation was such that it became necessary for me to step over one the warriors to get to him, and as I cautiously did so, I saw the handle of his knife projecting from the scabbard. I reached down and drew it forth without disturbing him. In a moment I was at my friend's side, and had cut the cords which bound him. He arose, and we approached the horses as quickly as possible. Selecting what we thought to be the two swiftest, we arranged the lariats about their heads so as to guide them, and I mounted mine as he stood. Brady, before mounting, motioned for my knife, which I threw in the snow at his feet. He then commeneed cutting the remainder of the horses loose. He had succeeded in loosing about two-thirds of them, when one of the Indians, aroused by the unusual commotion among the horses, sprang up. Brady was on the back of his horse instantly, and yelling like a savage, and using the knife as a spur, he dashed away, myself and most of the herd following at a break-neck speed.

The Indians fired after us, but we lay flat down upon our horses, and the bullets whistled harmlessly by. Of course we knew pursuit would be instituted at once but, thanks to the forethought of my friend, the most of the horses had been stampeded, and it would be some time before they could get regularly started, by which time we would gain quite an advantage.

Our all depended upon reaching the Moqus villiages for we were without arms, blankets, provisions or matches.

We urged our horses as much as we could, and got along finely until near daylight, when we came to a deep gully which we could not cross. The unfortunate occurances threw us off our course several degrees, and we had to travel three or four miles up the gully before we could cross.

About 8 a. m., we came in sight of the smoke of the villages, which we judged to be distant about fifteen miles.

About 10 o'clock, a. m., we discovered a small party of our enemies not more than one and a half miles to our left, using every effort to cut us off. They had divined our intention, and, knowing the country well, avoided the trouble which we had encountered at the gully and were now as near the villages as we were.

Four miles more and we should be safe within the principal villiage, which could now be plainly seen, situated as it is upon a high piece of ground.

It was indeed a race for life. Our horses were in a lather of sweat, and already beginning to fag. Should one of them stumble and fall, its rider would be at the mercy of the savages. On, we sped. We were now within two miles, aye, less than that, of the villiage, and the Indians not more than half a mile from us. If we only had arms!—but we had none.

The horses seemed to understand something of what was going on, and bent every energy to their work. Each of us now began to swing an arm to attract the attention of the villagers. When within half a mile of safety our enemies were almost in shooting distance of us. We began to shout, still making our pantomimic gestures. In a few moments the housetops were covered with people, and we were within a hundred yards of the nearest house a number a braves rushed out, armed, to our assistance. Our pursuers were not a hundred yards from us, but when they saw the Moquis coming to our assistance, they stopped and fired at us, but without effect. They then turned and rode off in an easterly direction.

The Moquis took us in and used us like brothers, furnished us with whatever we needed. We remained with them until Spring, when we made our way to Port Wingate, New Mexico.

Brady ascertained that one of the Navajoes understood some English, which was the reason he refused to talk, and he also learned from their conversation that they intended starting for their own villages the morning after the night on which we made our escape, where they intended to take us, for what purpose we could not tell, but we supposed for torture.

One of the horses on which we made the race for life died from overheat, and other one was worthless afterwards as long as we remained with the Moquis.

Ayer's
Cherry Pectoral

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs, such as Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma, and Consumption.

The reputation it has attained, in consequence of the marvellous cures it has produced during the last half century, is a sufficient assurance to the public that it will continue to realize the happiest results that can be desired. In almost every section of country there are persons, publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs, by its use. All who have tried it, acknowledge its superiority; and where its virtues are known, no one hesitates as to what medicine to employ to relieve the distress and suffering peculiar to pulmonary affections. CHERRY PECTORAL always affords instant relief, and performs rapid cures of the milder varieties of bronchial disorder, as well as the more formidable diseases of the lungs.

As a safeguard to children, amid the distressing diseases which beset the Throat and Chest of Childhood, it is invaluable; for, by its timely use, multitudes are rescued and restored to health.

This medicine gains friends at every trial, as the cures it is constantly producing are too remarkable to be forgotten. No family should be without it, and those who have once used it never will.

Eminent Physicians throughout the country prescribe it, and Clergymen often recommend it from their knowledge of its effects.

ROBINSON'S
Phosphorized Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, with Lacto-Phosphate of Lime,
FOR Consumption; Bronchitis; Aphonia; Tickling Coughs; Whooping Cough; Diseases of the Nerves System; Chronic Rheumatism; Scrofula; Tabes Mesenterica; Tumours; Diseases of the Bones, Joints, and Spine; Rickets; General Debility; Emaciation; Syphilitic and Scrofulous Ulcers; Anæmia; Amenorrhœa; Leucorrhœa; Chlorosis; Asthma, &c., &c.
It is prepared with the finest selected Cod Liver Oil,—one of the most esteemed remedies in the catalogue of the materia medica,—Lacto-Phosphate of Lime, which enters so largely into the formation for bone material and other important tissues of the body,—Phosphorus, the Great Brain and Nerve tonic and invigorator, in a form most desirable to obtain its fullest effects—together with other valuable remedial agents. These are all intimately combined in one delicate fluid homogenous appearance and delicate flavor, possessing remarkable power in arresting the decay and supplying the waste constantly going on in those abnormal conditions of the system affected by such diseases as pervert and impair nutrition, vitiate the blood and sap the vital forces. The beneficial effects of the continued use of this Compound in the first stage of Pulmonary Consumption can scarcely be estimated.
Price $1.00 per Bottle.
Six Bottles for $5.00.

MANHOOD:
How Lost, How Restored!

Just published, in a sealed envelope, A Lecture for the relief of young men who suffer from the effects of Errors and Abuses in early life, as Mental and Physicial Debility, Nervousness, &c., by Rev. J. Culverwell, M. D.
The celebrated author, in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates, from a thirty years' successful practice, that the alarming consequence of Errors in youth may be radically cured without the dangerous use of internal medicine or the application of the knife, pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.
☞ This Lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.
Sent under seal, in a plain envelope, to any address, postpaid, on receipt of six cents, or two post stamps.
