Covert and Burns and subsequently by other gentlemen in the House. At first the matter was treated very lightly by the Government. The Telegraph regretted that "the opposition would be merely nominal." But they were in error.

The tactics which they had to face were different from what they expected: the different from what they expected; the $1,000, Messenger $400, Education Commissioner $3,000, Government were completely surprised, and it is now generally admitted, only escaped defeat by concealing from the House the tree position of affairs. When the House rose an Opposition, active, determined and tolerably will organized, had been established. The platform on which its members united was that the Government was constitutionally bound to account to the people through their Representatives for their administration of affairs. But some may say this is the corner stone of the Constitution. True enough; and it was upon that which the Opposition of 1876 rested, as every one will admit who will

Before anything can be done in this direction, it is necessar that the old matter arising out of the construction of the Exhibition Palace be settled. From what information we have it appears that the Committee are now in a position to claim the $3,000 from the City and County which they were to receive on the performance of certain conditions. This will come up for consideration at the next meeting of the City Council, the County having already made its appropriation, when we hope the Aldermen will see their way to clear the Exhibition rounds from the control of private individuals to whom they have been no inconsiderable ourden. If the $3,000 is to be paid to the Committee, would it not be advisable to secure a transfer of the grounds to the City and County, to be held by them jointly and managed by the Mayor and Warden?
