Poetry.

LOVE AND I.

Love and I were friends of old:—
I was then a true believer
In the tales for frolic told
By this little gay deceiver.
Easy 'tis to trace the birth
Of the bond that grew between us:—
I was but a child of earth,
Love could call his mother Venus.

Years and years have gathered fast—
Life has lost her summer glory,
Each deception of the past
Seems a nigh-forgotten story.
Still, in dreams of what is o'er
Mem'ry takes a retribution—
Though the partnership of yore
Long has been in dissolution.

Recipe for an Appetite.

My lad, who sits at breakfast
With forehead in a frown,
Because the chop is underdone
And the fritter overbrown,

Just leave your dainty mincing,
And take to mend your fare,
A slice of golden sunshine,
And a cup of morning air.

And when you have eat and drunken,
If you want a little fun,
Throw off your jacket of broadcloth
And take an up-hill run.

And what with one and the other,
You will be so strong and gay,
That work will be only a pleasure
Through all the rest of the day.

And when it is time for supper,
Your bread and milk will be
As sweet as a comb of honey.
Will you try my recipe?

A SUDDEN CURE.

A meloncholy woman lay
In sickness on her bed,
And, in a faint and broken voice,
To her sad husband said:

"Dear David, when my earthly form
Has turned to lifeless clay,
O wait an' weep a little while,
Nor throw yourself away,

"I know a woman, kind an' true,
On whom you may depend.
Oh! marry Aramilla Jones—
She is my dearest friend."

"Yes, Hannah, I have wanted long,
To speak o' this before:
For Aramilla Jones an' I
Have talked the matter o'er"

"Then you an' Aramilla Jones
Have been too smart and sly;
I tell you, David Wilkinson,
I'm not a-goin' to die;"

Her dark eyes flashed; her strength returned,
She left her bed of pain;
A week had scarcely passed away
When she was well again.

Select Story.

Robin Hood and Another Hood

RAY had miserable dreams that night, and the next day found himself very shy of any stranger that seemed to bestow upon him an attentive glance. The Sunday was drearily long, and all his books had grown suddenly flat and uninteresting. He was glad when Monday came, bringing its school duties, and he could be with the others again—though indeed they had not much comfort to give him, and seemed ill at ease themselves. They looked interrogation points at each other, and were answered by a despondent shake of the head.

Once, during the morning, there was a heavy rap at the school-room door, and five of the pupils started and turned a shade paler at the sound. They scanned the teacher's face closely on his return, but could read nothing unusual in its expression.

"I tell you it's very nice to talk about 'bold outlaws' and merry men,' and all that, but if Robin Hood and his band felt anything the way we do, there wasn't much fun in such a life, that's all," said Charlie, when they were alone together for a few minutes.

At recess Ray searched the long line of hooks where the girls hung their wrappings, and was so thorough in his examination that a school-mate called out curiously:

"Hello, Ray! Don't think your cap is among the girls' things, do you? Why, you've got it on your head, old fellow! What are you looking for?"

Ray laughed uneasily in answer, but he had assured himself that the blue hood did not come to their school. That evening he fairly trembled when his father looked up and announced:

"They have found a clue to those robbers!"

But it proved to be only a mail robbery that was spoken of, and not that dreadful affair in the dense wood, he breathed freely again. Day after day he kept an anxious look-out for that blue hood, and was thereby led into so many chases and experiments, that his sister Nell petulantly declared "Ray acted as if he were possessed, and stared at all the girls he met until they must think him the rudest boy in the world."

In fact, it was a week of tribulation, and when Saturday came again the little party were no wiser than they had been at first, and the heavey burden was still upon their hands and hearts.

"We must get rid of the thing somehow. Let's put an advertisement in the paper or something," said Dick, desperately. "Maybe they'd see that and would give us a chance to get it to them."

That suggestion promised a hope of relief, and was eagerly adopted, but carrying it into effect was a matter of no little difficulty, and five heads—black, auburn, brown, flaxen and gold,—were huddled together over the important sheet of foolscap, in a combined effort to tell just enough without telling too much. There were a great many erasures, corrections and rewritings, but at last this was considered satisfactory:

"If the boy and girl who lost a valise in the woods, which was accidental, will give their address, and ask no questions, or tell where they want it sent, it will be returned."

Then as no one dared venture to carry it to the printing-office, the notice was inclosed in an envelope, together with all the available funds of the band to pay for its insertion in the paper, and sent by mail.

It was duly published in the Evening Star, and, though the type-setter had made it read "wool" for "woods," the boys were quite sure that those for whom it was intended would understand, and they waited in hope. But the days went slowly by, and nothing came of it; and they were still burdened with their miserable secret, that seemed to have grown more weighty and guilty from its long concealment. At last Bob made a daring proposition.

"Fellows, let's go to a lawyer. They don't tell things that's told them, 'cause its their business to get folks clear, anyhow. We could tell him about it sort of careful like, you know, and he'd tell us what to do."

The others held their breath for a moment, then began to consider the question, and ended by adopting it; because something must be done, and there really seemed nothing else to do.

Ray and Dick were appointed a committee to wait upon Squire Chester, and seek his advice as prudently as possible. With such an undertaking before them they could not endure delay, and they set out at once, while Bob, Neal and Charlie sought a retired fence-corner to await the issue.

Down the street, where swung a dirty sign that had once been blue and gold the two boys halted for an instant, then, with beating hearts ascended the stairs to an office that held a good deal of dust, a great many books, and a general air of learning. Fortunately, the gentleman, they wished to see was alone. He looked up from his papers and over his spectacles, and said briskly,—

"Well, boys, ?"

"We've come—that is—it's a little law business, sir," said Ray, gravely.

"Indeed!" The lawyer looked at them through his spectacles, this time. "Be seated then."

"We wanted to know," proceeded Ray, sitting uncomfortably on the edge of his chair," whether if anybody did anything that was against the law, but did it just in fun, and didn't mean to, really, if—it would be just the same?'

"We mean if some fellows were playing outlaw in the woods, and thought they'd surprise another fellow they knew by putting leaves over their faces, and jumping out at him" explained Dick," and when they did it wasn't him at all, but somebody that took 'em for real robbers, and just run and left their—somethnig they were carrying."

"When did you do it, and how many were they of you?" asked Squire Chester coolly.

The boys looked at each other in consternation, then Dick said gruffly, "Go ahead," and Ray told the whole story from first to last, and all their troubles and perplexities. The lawyer listened with due gravity and attention, except that he seemed troubled with a cold, and had to turn away his face two or three times to cough a little. He also remarked that any communications from clients were, of course, safe with him; and, after a few minutes' consideration, informed them that he thought he could manage the case so as to save them from difficulty. In the meanwhile they had better leave the valise with him.

"I think if two of you bring it here, openly and in daylight, no one will suspect anything," he said, reassuringly, "and I will try to discover the owners."

The two drew a long breath of relief, as they arose to go, but Ray paused with his hand upon the door, and said hesitatingly, "We forgot to ask how much you will charge, sir. I don't know how we can pay unless you will wait for us to earn it some way, and maybe you wouldn't like to do that?"

"I must have my fee, certninly," said the squire. "But if you don't mind working for it, and are all willing to pile wood for me next Saturday afternoon, when you are out of school, we will call it settled."

Ray joyfully promised to bring his whole band; and the next holiday found five light-hearted boys at work in Squire Chester's back yard. They were rid of their troublesome secret, and felt that the matter was in safe hands; so they did not feel that they were having a dull time, even before sunny-haired Grace Chester danced out to them with an invitation:

"When you're through work come into the house, please; I'm going to have a party. Not a stiff party, with refreshments," said Grace, in disdain, "but a nice old-fashioned one—and such a one as papa and mama used to have when they were little—to pop corn and boil candy; it'll be lots of fun! Papa said you were going to have a woodpiling bee, and I'd better have a little party afterward, like old times."

It surley was "lots of fun;" the boys were all agreed upon that long before they went home. But the best of all was the tidings the squire privately gave them that he had found the owner of the valise. It had only contained some apples that a boy and girl, belonging to a poor family in the town, had gone out into the country to gather; only apples, but they were spoiled now, and they had not been a small loss to those who had gone so far for them.

"But we'll make that all right," said the boys, decidedly. And they did, filling the old valise with the choicest apples their plentiful homes afforded, and crowding into all the crevices a goodly quantity of nuts, for which they had searched the woods. Then, one evening, they bore the old portmanteau to the little house of which the squire had told them, placed it upon the steps, and rapping loudly, ran away.

The Robin Hood band flourished a long time after that, took in many new members, and the little worn volume was read again and again. But when some of the new-comers expressed a wish that instead of target-shooting and make-believe hunting, they could engage in some of the real exploits of the real Robin Hood band, there was surprising unanimity in the earnestness with which the original five said:

"No sir! none of that! Fun is fun and wrong is wrong!"—Wide Awake.

MANUFACTURERS OF THE Celebrated Singer Sewing Machine.

Perfection Means Success.

THE perfection and great simplicity of the Williams Singer Sewing Machines, have placed them ahead of all other makers, and notwithstanding that, all other sewing machine companies find their trade constantly reduced being now not one-half of what it was in former years, and give as a reason hard times. The C. W. Williams Manufacturing Company find their trade rapidly increasing. Their sales in the month of May, 1877, were one-third more than they ever made in one month since the Company had an existence. What does this mean? Simply this, that the Williams Singer is the best Sewing Machine made. The ladies find it out, tell their friends and neighbors, and so sales are increased.

To the Working Class.—We are now prepared to furnish all classes with constant employment at home, the whole of the time, or for their spare moments. Business new, light and profitable. Persons of either sex easily earn from 50 cents to $5 per evening, and a proportional sum by devoting their whole time to the business. Boys and girls earn nearly as much as men. That all who see this notice may send their address, and test the business we make this unparelled offer: To such as are not well satisfied we will send one dollar to pay for the trouble of writing. Full particulars, samples worth several dollars to commence work on, and a copy of Home and Fireside, one of the largest and best Illustrated Publications, all sent free by mail. Reader, if you want permanent, profitable work, address, GEORGE STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine

$999 Can't be made by every agent every month in the business we furnish, but those willing to work can easily earn a dozen dollars a day right in their own localities. Have no room to explain here. Business pleasant and honorable. Women, and boys and girls do as well as men. We will furnish you a complete Outfit free. The business pays better than anything else. We will bear expense of starting you. Particulars free. Write and see. Farmers and mechanics, their sons and daughters, and all classes in need of paying work at home, should write to us and learn all about the work at once. Now is the time. Don't delay. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Maine. 705.
