A GIRL'S GOOD SENSE.

It was scrupolously neat and Give dainty in all its appointments, the wasn't so puzzling !

although the carpet was a tissue of darns, his pockets, and a cigar balanced between the furniture faded, and the hearth rug skilfully eked out of quite another fabric inserted in the spot most worn. A few flowers, in a slender-throated vase, the fender-irons glittered like gold and the thin muslin curtains, artistically mended here and there, were white as snow; and Mrs. Breighton herself looked like Cinderella's god-mother, in her dress of ancient brocade, best yellow lace, and the rings glittering on her small, shriveled hands.

That was something to be proud of. What though paralysis had robbed her of all use of those daintly slippered feet -what though the grand house she had entered as a bride was now narrowed down to this one room in a second rate building, where two other families also set up their household altars-she was a lady still, and she could boast that she never degraded herself to common-place toil. Our means are limited, said old Mrs. Breighton, with the lofty air of a duchess; 'but the pension of my son, the Colonelwho, as you probably may remember, was killed on the Florida frontier-is sufficient to maintain myself and my two granddaughters-and we are ladies." Minnie Breighton presently came in with her little chocolataire on a napkincovered tray, and slices of toast, exquisite ly browned and cut as thin as a wafer. " I hope you haven't been kept waiting grandma?" she said. " My dear"-with an air of mild resigna tion-" I am accustomed to wait." "Oh, I'm so sorry! But our fire is out and I had to run in and borrow the use o Mrs. Tucker's stove to boil the chocolate and-"
