"Not clear nordark," as the Scripture saith The pastor's memories are: No day that is gone was shadowless, No night was without its star: But mingled bitter and sweet hath been The portion of his cup:

"The hand that in love hath smitten," he "In love hath bound us up." Free flies his thought over many a field Of stubble and snow and bloom, And now it trips through a festival, And now it halts at a tomb; Young faces smile in his reverie Of those that are young no more,

And voices are heard that only come

With the winds from a far-off shore. He thinks of the day when first, with fea And faltering lips, he stood To speak in the sacred place the Word To the waiting multitude : He walks again to the house of God, With the voice of joy and praise, With many whose feet long time have pressed Heaven's safe and blessed ways. He enters again the homes of toil, And joins in the homely chat: He stands in the shop of the artisan; He sits, where the Master sat, Ai the poor man's fire and the rich man's But who to day are the poor, And who are the rich? Ask Him who keeps The treasures that ever endure.

Once more the green and the grove resoun With the merry children's din; He hears their shout at the Christmas tide When Santa-Claus stalks in. Once more he lists while the camp fires roan On the distant mountain-side,

Or, proving apostleship, plies the brook Where the fierce young troutlings hide. And now he beholds the wedding train To the alter slowly move, And the solemn words are said that seal The sacrament of love.

Anon at the font he meets once more The tremulous youthful pair, With a white-robed cherub crowing response To the consecrating prayer.

By the couch of pain he kneels, again; Again, the thin hand lies Cold in his palm, while the last far look Steal into the steadfast eyes And now the burden of hearts that break breathless and unsuccessful. Lies heavy upon his own-

And bearing another's load Doth lighten your own, and shorten the ways, And brighten the homeward road.

Harper's Magazine for September. WAYFARERS.

The way is long, my darling, The road is rough and steep, And fast across the evening sky I see the shadows sweep. But, Oh! my love, my darling, No ill to us can come, No terror turn us from the path, For we are going home.

Your feet are tired, my darling— So tired, the tender feet; But think, when we are there at last How sweet the rest! how sweet! For lo! the lamps are lighted, And yonder gleaming dome, Before us, shining like star, Shall guide our footsteps home. We've lost the flowers we gathered So early in the morn; And on we go, with empty hands, And garments soiled and worn. But, oh! the dear All Father Will out to meet us come,

And fairer flowers and whther robes There wait for us at home. Art cold, my love, and famished? Art taint and sore athirst? Be patient yet a little while, And joyous, as at first; For oh! the sun sets never

Within that land of bloom And thou shalt eat the bread of life And drink life's wine at home. The wind blows cold, my darling, Adown the mountain steep, And thick across the evening sky The darking shadows creep; But, oh! my love, press onward, Whatever trials come, For in the way the Father set We two are going home.

Hood.

BY KATE W. HAMILTON. AY found the book one rainy through the whole house, from sum of gold, and what if it should be stolen applebin in the cellar to the old chests from them before they could restore it to and boxes stowed away in the attic. its owners! Among the treasures of these last he discovered a little worn volume "Robin was still for the rest of the afternoon, they should betray themselves. his fancy revelling in the marvellous exploits of a far away greenwood.

The bold outlaw and his gay, daring band, quite captivated the boy. His head was full of them long after the story was finished, and, very naturally, several other boys, Dick, Bob, Neal and Charliewere soon in the same condition. The book was read again when the whole party were together-begun on the hayloft in the barn, and completed by the light of a bonfire on the common. Soon there came a great demand for stout twine; there was an immense amount of that the boy was barefoot and the gir waittling in the back yard; bows and arrows increased, and the pumpkins Hiram had stored in the shed suffered as Rob targets. The very first holiday took the entire quintette, armed with their new weapons, off to their own greenwood, a pleasant forest about a mile from the small town where they lived. Ray, the founder, was plan, so their unwelcome treasure was dubbed him "Robin Hood" at once; carefully covered with leaves; and the name of Little John, Friar Tuck, and the winding, circuitous way, lest there might their free roaming-now sending a shower | boisterous little party that had gone out of arrows into some thicket, now running a few hours before. wild races in pursuit of imaginary deer.

"But I wish we could have some of the real adventures they did, you know hunting, and stopping people, and all that," said Dick, leaning back against a tree. "Should think they'd just as lief been outlawed as not. Sush a jolly life!

"I know what we can do," announced Bob, with sudden animation. "Will Carey went out to his grandfather's this morning, and he'll be coming back by and by. He nearly always comes through the woods, and we can spring out and surprise him, and make him join the band. He's a real good fellow, anyhow. "Great surprise!" laughed Ray, "when he knows every one of us as well as he

"Oh, we'll cover up our faces some way, and change our voices so he can't tell us just at first, until we lead him off to our cave by the old rock," persisted Bob.

"That might do," began Ray, doubt fully; but his voice was drowned by the hearty acceptance of the others, and the whole party went busily to work to make masks from the leaves about them. It was not an easy task to fasten them securely together, and there were many failures and much laughing and planning before they finally succeeded. Then they made their way out where a beaten path led through the wood, and concealed themselves behind trees and bushes. "Must be nearly time for him to come,"

said Bob.

"Hush!" whispered Dick. There was a noise of rustling leaves, a sound of footsteps drawing nearer, until they were opposite, the ambush. Then the boys started up with gruff shouts: " Halt!"

"Stand and deliver!"

"Your money or your life!" A wild scream answered them, and valise was droopped at their feat, and two figures went flying down the road with a speed almost like that of the

The boys stared at each other in astonishment; there had evidently been a mistake. Ray regained his senses first, and called after the runaways: "Hello! stay! come back!"

a small boy, and a girl's fluttering dress

"Such a run! couldn't get auywhere near them," he panted, throwing himself upon the ground. "frightened nearly out of their wits!"

"We might have known it wasn't Will Carey, if we had stopped long enough to have known anything," said Ray, in dismay. "What shall we do with this?" lifting the valise.

"We'll send it to them, of course," answered Charlie, glibly. "Well, who are they?"

"Why-oh-" Charlie paused; and that was all the reply that was offered for nobody knew who they were.

"Must have been simple to think we were robbers in real earnest," muttered Bob, breaking the silence. "What's in the old trap, anyway, Ray?"

"Don't know. It's heavy, but it's locked," Ray answered. "I expect we might find out." ob served Neal, drawing a nail from his pocket, and beginning to examine the lock. But Dick interposed. "Better let alone. You see, fellows. if those two run into town and tell some great story about being robbed in the woods, it'll be kind of queer for us, you know, if it's found out who did it. We really did tell them to 'stand and deliver. and all that." "Pshaw! just in fun!" exclaimed Charlie, stoutly.

"But there's the law, you know,' pursued Dick, doubtfully. "Why, they might call it real highway robbery. don't know much about the law, but kind of thing, if a thing is done, they don't pay, much attention to wether it's done in fun or not."

The boys began to look troubled. "I wish they had the old thing," said Neal, casting an anxious glance over his shoulder to see that no one was near

"We might take it over to our cave and think what to do with it afterwards," said Ray, sharing the same anxiety. "Better not let Will Carey or anybody know about it, I guess."

The party hurried away, as desirous now of avoiding their school-mate as they had before been of surprising him. There was no more hunting or shooting that day; the band spent the remainder of the afternoon in solemn council over their booty, which seemed to grow more and more troublesome the longer they thought of it. They dared not tell anybody about it for fear of falling into the hands of that powerful law which Robin Hood and Another they dreaded so much, and of which they knew so little except that it forbade highway robbery. "What would be done about it if-" hesitated Neal.

"Penitentiary," answered Dick, briefly, in a low tone. "It would just kil my mother." murmured Charlie, with an expression settling about his lips which seemed to say that his part of the search would be conducted very cautiously

"We'll have to watch and be careful, and when we find out, get it back to them the best way we can,' said Ray. "We don't know anything about them, only wore a blue hood." "Or sunbonnet, or something," added disease, Syphilitic and Mercurial diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, General Debility, and for Purifying the This Sarsaparilla is a combination of regetable alteratives — Stillingia, Mandrake, Yellow Dock - with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and is the most efficacious medicine yet known FLOWER the diseases it is intended to cure.

Its ingredients are so skilfully com-bined, that the full alterative effect of each is assured, and while it is so mild as-to be harmless even to children, it is still so effectual as to purge out from the system those impurities and corruptions which develop into loathsome disease. The reputation it enjoys is derived from its cures, and the confidence which prominent physicians all over the country repose in it, prove their experience of its usefulness. Certificates attesting its virtues have accumulated, and are constantly being received, and as many of these cases are publicly known, they furnish convincing evidence of the superiority of this Sarsaparilla over every other alterative medicine. So generally is its superiority to any other medicine known, that we need do no more than to assure the public that the best qualities it has ever possessed are strictly maintained.
