These "run-down" farms can be brought up, and they must be. How Firstly, by stock-raising and manuremaking. The proprietor of such a farm should lay down two rules, and make them inflexible as cast-iron: the what can walk to market; and the had been received: other, to permit no fertilizing material to go to waste. A "run-down" farm will not carry a large amount of stock, but it should be stocked to its utmost capacity. Especially ought sheep to be kept. The foot of the sheep brings fertility. Improved stock should be obtained so far as means permit. It costs no more to keep a well bred animal than a scrub. In some cases it costs less. Notably is this true of swine.
