"Do ye not know me, Donald?" Pushing back her grey hair-"Can ye not speak to me, Donald-Me who was once so fair?"

"Many years have gone over us, Fortunate years for thee; When I see thee they seem not so many-Only when thou seest me.

"For I wear the snows of winters No sun and no summers can change: Yet I seem to hear the spring coming. And the bluebird beginning to range.

" As when in the old days together We wandered and talked by the stream Of thy life in the far new country, And our love. Was it all a dream?

" For what could I be to thee. Donald? A man grown to honor and land, With a choice of the whole world before

"'Tas long that I stayed by the brook-side, In the dews and the dark of the eye, Ere I could forget to grieve. "For thou wast my first love, Donald-Though the first love of my heart:

Why should I not tell thee, Donald, What sadness it was then to part?"

'I cannot recall thee, woman; And yet, when I hear thy voice, I hear the low rippling river, I see the girl of my choice.

"Can ye not tell me of Janet, Something of her I once loved? She gave me a wing for my bonnet; I gave her a ring ere I roved.

"Think ye on her sometimes Donald? Can ye remember the ring? It is worn now very thin, Donald; Yet perhaps ye'll remember the thing.

"It is here on my hand still, Donald; I can not remove it again; I have kept it through labor and sorrow It is grown now a part of my pain."

The New School Ma'am.

CONTAINS SOME NEEDFUL INFORMATION. Why had Mabel Frost given up a life of luxury to teach a grammer school in an obscure country town? Young, beautiful, wealthy, but almost without family for an incurable case of catarrh. ties, she had wearied of the slavery of fashion. Young as she was, she had begun to suspect its hollowness. She sought an object and an interest in life. She felt that thus far she had lived only for herself. She formed the determination to live, in part at least, for others, and to take her share of the worlds work. But what could she do?

It was natural, perhaps, that she shou'd think of teaching. She had been thoroughly educated. She had been fortunate enough to graduate at a school where the useful as well as the ornament. al received its share of attention, and her natural gifts, as well as studious habits, had given her the first place among her school-mates.

Betsey Clark, referred to by Squire Hadley, was a dress-maker, born and reared in North Sparta, who had drifted to New York and established herself in a lucrative connection in her line, being patronized by some of the best families. She was plain in her appearance, but her nature was pure gold; and Mabel Frost the wealthy heiress, was attracted to wards her. To her she confided her ear nest desire to be of use to her kind. 'Tell me,' she said, 'what shall I do! You are practical. You know me well. What am I lit for ?,

'I hardly know what to say, Miss Frost said the dress maker. 'Your training would interfere with many things you are capable of doing. I can do but one thing.'

'And that you do well.'

patience, I suppose.'

'I think 1 do,' said Betsey, with ne false modesty, 'I have found my path in life. It would be too humble for you.' 'Not too humble. I dont think I have a false pride of that kind; but I never could tolerate the needle. I haven't the

'There is no dout of that. You will find a good deal to be done; too much, perhaps.

'Better too much than too little,

'If that is your feeling I will write at once. Have you any directions to give me?'

'Say nothing about my wealth. I wish to be judged on my own merits.'

'Shail I give your name?'

'Only in part. Let me be Mabel Frost,' liere let it be explained that the prospective school-mistress was Mabel Frost Cunningham. If she had been called otherwise in the chapter it was only because the time had not yet come to reveal her pame.

'If she had not yet come to reveal her pame.

Thus was the way opened for Mabel'sapearance in North Sparta. Betsey Clark's commerdation proved effectual. 'She was educated here; she knows

'If you should wear your last season's dresses-those you carried to Saratoga, said Betsey Clark, 'you would frighten everybody, at North Spata. There would be no end of gossip.'

'No doubt you are right,' said Mabel, l put myself in your hands. Make me half a-dozen dresses such as you think I ought to have. There is only a week, but you can hire extra help.

Given carte blanche, Betsey Clark proved worthy of her trust. The dresses were ready in time. They were plain for the heiress, but there was still reason to think that Miss Frost would be better dressed than any of her predecessors in office partly because they were cut in the style What could I give thee but my hand? of the day, and partly because Mabel had 2 STORES on the corner of York and King graceful figure, which all styles became. and incapacitated for matrimanial alliance.

The Lucina Cordial has restored thousands of persons to health and vigor who have ignorantly injured themselves in youth. Procure it, then; you can use it without exposure or hindrance to business, at home or abroad, and be restored:

Objection has been naturally made to the price of this Cordial, because the trush that has been thrown on the market, in opposition to it, is sold cheaper, but the fact is, it cannot be afforded for less, and ought to be much dearer, as many of the ingredients which compose it are among the costlest things in nature; whereas the question
