OUR NEXT GOVERNOR.

This subject continues to be one of the unsolved problems, while speculation continues to be rife, as to this or that individual to fill the place. It is to be hoped, however, since we have been kept so long in the dark, that when daylight dawns it will be upon the person of some individual of mental and moral qualities suitable for so exalted an office, and it seems to us that scarcely one of the persons named by rumor is calculated to fill the bill. There is one St. John paper very pertinacious in behalf of a certain gentleman's claims to the office, and the chief ground upon which it rests its claims is the great service rendered by its protegee in bringing about "confederation" a policy which said paper contends has been the means of ruining the Maritime Provinces. Verily that paper requires turning over and over and frying on the other side. Our humble opinion is, that since we have been kept so long in the dark, we shall have a "dark horse" for governor, and that not one of the aspirants named by rumor, will be placed over us, least of all the St. John newspaper's man, unless he can furnish better credentials than those already set forth in regard to "confederation"—and he cannot. At any rate, it is to be hoped the dignity of the position will be considered by the Dominion Government to be paramount to the political claims of any man, and that character, sound judgment and a respectable gentlemanly demeanor will be considered as a primary importance in making such an exalted appointment?

A SUGGESTIVE VERDICT.

A sixteen thousand dollar verdict against a company is a pretty serious matter. A jury has lately rendered it against the elevated railway corporation in New York. It was rendered because of injuries received by a working man while going from his home to his place of employment. The men who inflicted it were the porter, the ticket chopper and the brakeman of a train who, by the interposition of English terms with American facts, is called a "guard." There was a dispute between the injured man and these persons as to whether he had put a ticket in the box. As a part of the dispute these persons picked up the man and threw him down hard on the platform. He was in the hospital for eight months because of injuries from the breaking of a blood vessel at the base of the brain. At the trial the employees of the company swore positively that the injured man was drunk and fell down and broke his own blood vessel. They insisted that they exhausted the resources of benevolence in trying to prevent him from committing an assault and battery on the wooden floor of the platform. There was such an extreme probability of truthfulness about this statement that the jury gave the plaintiff the benefit of the surplus of it. Hence the verdict of $16,000. An American paper has the following to say on the subject: "The finding will meet with the approval of very many of the travelling public. The guards doubtless have a hard time to manage the great crowds and the exemption of the elevated system from accidents is in its favor. But we believe that this is the fourth instance in which citizens have lately recovered high damages for grave injuries inflicted by brakemen, porters and the like. The condition of public opinion will be attested after while by an acquittal of some citizen who kills one of these guards for an assault and battery on him, and then the company will wake up to the fact that they are not popular."

The sentence of death passed upon Henry C. Fanning, a United States murderer, has been commuted to imprisonment for life. If all that was alleged against the prisoner on the trial had been verified by indubitable evidence he would have deserved amply the supreme penalty of the law. The murder of which he was convicted was one of the worst on record. The killing of the woman Taylor, his alleged victim, was as cruel as any crime credited to the nocturnal assassin of Whitechapel, or the Monster, who under the name of Deeming, now awaits execution at Melbourne, Australia. Before the executive, in Fanning's behalf, two arguments were submitted. One was that his counsel, by reason of incompetency, had "butchered" his case. The other was that the evidence, largely circumstantial, left room for doubt as to actual guilt. A strong point made in favor of the condemned man was the appearance in support of his appeal of a representative of the New York district attorney's office. It is reasonable to suppose that the authorities had justification for interfering with the consequences of a conviction that they had secured and that they would not have interposed if, in their judgment, Fanning deserved to be judicially killed. Under all the circumstances the governor's action is a fair concession to the manifest justice of a president and pathetic appeal. The perseverance of the petitioners and the doubt which really existed, saved the prisoner at the very entrance to the death chamber. Instead of being electrocuted, he will suffer imprisonment at hard labor, so that while the world is spared the spectacle of a questionable execution the ends of justice are substantially attained.

BEHRING SEA.

The Behring Sea business has taken another and a satisfactory step forward. Two arbitrators will be appointed by Great Britain and the three remaining will be designated by disinterested powers, Sweden, France, and Italy. Mr. Edward J. Phelps ex-minister to England has been named as counsel for the United States. His standing as a jurist and a diplomatist is well assured, as his knowledge of the special matter of dispute. Mr. Phelps believes that the United States are right in their demand and he has not hesitated to avow his belief. With him is associated Mr. James C. Carter, a well known member of the New York bar.

THEY CHAIN HIM

BUT IT IS TO PREVENT A FATAL ACCIDENT.

Mrs. Fallon Denies a Story of Inhuman Treatment Told by Bernard Wolff to the Police Concerning Her Infant Boy.

Word was sent in the Seventeenth precinct police station New York, the other evening that Frank A. Fallon and his wife Mary, were abusing their 9 year son, Edward. The man who conveyed the information is a few named Bernard Wolff, a lawyer, and one of the most respected citizens of that portion of the Twenty-sixth ward known as Brownsville.

The Fallons live on Christopher street, near Eastern parkway. They have four children and Edward is the youngest boy. On Thursday afternoon Mr. Wolff called at the Fallon house and saw Mrs. Fallon. He told her that he was a plumbing inspector and was allowed to go through the house. When he reached the upper floor he attempted to open a door leading to a closet. Then Mrs. Fallon objected, but Wolff persisted and opened the door. What he saw can best be told in his own language.

"I never again," he said, "wish to see a sight so horrible as that which greeted me when I saw that child. There was a belt around his waist to which was fastened a chain attached to a ring in the floor. The poor child's helplessness was pitiable, and its face was more that of a specter than a human being. His bed consisted of a lot of rags thrown on the floor, and the stench, was almost overpowering. I released the child, opened the window and led him to it. All he had on was a little undershirt and that was filthy. When I led him to an open window, and a breath of fresh air blew in, the boy seemed bewildered. He clutched feebly at the window sill and acted like a child that had not breathed any fresh air for months."

An Eagle reporter called at the house the other morning, but could not gain an entrance. Later, accompanied by Detective Bob Kortright, of the Seventeenth precinct, he was admitted. Mrs. Fallon was very indignant.

"The idea of me being accused of abusing Edward," she said, "The poor child fell out of a baby carriage when he was three months old and ever since then he has been an idiot. We have never maltreated him. My husband is employed in Dunham, Buckley & Co.'s, on Broadway, New York. He would not hurt a hair of the child's head."

"Is it true that you kept the boy chained to the floor?" she was asked.

"Certainly it is," said Fallon. "We have to do it. The boy is liable at any time to throw himself out of the window. It is done merely as a safeguard. Gracious knows that with three other children and a paralytic brother, I have my hands full. Edward takes a walk with his father as soon as he comes home."

When asked whether the child could be seen Mrs. Fallon answered in the affirmative. A moment later she brought the boy into the presence of the detective and the reporter. Whether Mr. Wolff's visit had caused a change in the child's appearance is a question, but young Edward was neatly dressed. Mrs. Fallon also produced the rope and belt. When spoken to by Detective Sergeant Kortright the boy did not answer but kept touching his head.

"He cannot talk," said Mrs. Fallon. "He always complained about his head. My brother-in-law, who is a physician has treated him from birth, but claims that he is incurable. He has never got over that fall."

The detective and the reporter then saw the closet in which the child was chained. It is a good sized bedroom with a child's bed in one corner. Although the bedclothing was not of the best, it looked comfortable and the horrible stench of which Mr. Wolff complained was not noticed. Nevertheless several neighbors state that they have heard the child scream night after night as if some one were beating it. The Society for the prevention of cruelty to children was notified and will make a thorough investigation.

How the Domestic, Social and Literary World is Waking.

It seems that the great seat of American learning, Yale College, was inaugurated by Mr. Yale, who came from Wrexham, in North Wales. Mr. Phelps, formerly the American Minister in London, is now a Professor at Yale, and recently wrote to Sir John Puleston, M. P., asking him to procure a root of ivy from the grave of Thomas Yale, in Wrexham churchyard; to have it carefully packed, and sent out to him, as the students very much desired to plant it against the college building.

The most costly and precious wine in the world is that contained in a cask called the 'Rose,' in the Bremen Town Hall cellars. This Rudesheim of the vintage of the year 1653, is of the colour of old ale, and has a wonderful aroma, though a rather hard taste. It is never sold, but is used exclusively for the sick of Bremen, the only exceptions having been when a small bottle was presented to the Emperor William I., another to Frederick III., and one to Prince Bismarck. The supposed money value of this wine is something beyond credence, but as it is sold, this detail is of slight importance.

"What do those letters stand for?" asked the curious wife of her husband as she looked at his Masonic seal. "Well, really my love," he replied encouragingly, "I presume it is because they can't sit down. She postponed further questioning."

The Crown Princess of Denmark is the tallest Royal lady in Europe, if not the tallest woman, her height being over six feet two inches. Her grandmother was Mile Desreux Chary, the daughter of a stockbroker of Marseilles. This young woman killed Napoleon Bonaparte, after, waris Emperor, in order to marry Bernadotte, who eventually became King of Sweden and Norway. Her grand-daughter, the Crown Princess of Denmark, is richest, as well as the tallest, European princess, having inherited $5,000,000 from her maternal grandfather, Prince Frederick of the Netherlands, in addition to the fortune left her by her father.

Birdie McGinnis: If I consent to become Mrs. De Smith will you always love and protect? Gus De Smith: Hold up, Birdie! I've no objection to loving you, but when it comes to protecting you I want you to understand that I am a free trader.

The Queen, as most people know, is exceedingly fond of music of all kinds, and likes to know what the popular songs of the day are like. One of the stipulations in the appointment of Maids of Honor is that they must be accomplished musicians; principally to play duets with Princess Beatrice, who cares for nothing but classical music. One of the Ladies in waiting (the Hon. Bertha Lambert) is very fond of singing to the Queen such songs as she hears in the streets. After a recent visit to London she asked the Queen's permission to sing the song which is in everybody's mouth viz, 'Ta-ra-boom-de-ay.' Her Majesty and the Princess were greatly taken with it, and asked for it again and again. Miss Lambert regretted that she could not send the accompanying dance. The Queen's pleasure in the song was short-lived, for after three days she complained that she could not get the refrain out of her head.

Albery, the dramatist, wrote his graceful comedy, 'The Two Roses,' at the Ship Inn, Heme Bay, the quaint outside staircase of which old hostelry, has attracted many an artist, as well as the low, Gothic house close by, with its arched doorways. One of these his, unfortunately, been recently fitted with a modern door, all new varnish and brass furniture, which looks curiously out of place.

Aunt Jemima (from the country, on her first visit to the Zoo, sees the giraffe).

—Lord-a-mussy, Joshua, what that animal?

Uncle Joshua.—That? Why, that's a hostrich.

Aunt Jemima.—Where's the feeders, then?

Uncle Joshua.—Oh, I s'pose the bird's molting!

The Queen has sent a large photograph of the Duke of Clarence, in a black and gold frame, to all the officers of the 10th Hussars who went over to Windsor for the funeral. The portrait selected by her Majesty is the one taken some time back when the Prince was only a captain in the 10th Hussars, and it was done in Dublin when his Royal Highness went over for some public function.
