

THE AMERICAN BARON.

(BY JAMES DE MILLE.)

Well, how do you know that that she was there?
By Jove!
And the bells of the sea—n, too?
She would be if she were there, by Jove!
Yes, if there wasn't another present that I wot of.
Well, we won't argue about that; besides, I haven't come to the point yet.
The point?
Yes, the real reason why I'm here, when I'm wanted home.
The real reason why? Why, haven't you been telling it to me all along?
Well, no, I haven't got to the point yet. Drive on, then, old man.
Well, you know, continued Hawbury, after hunting all through Canada I gave up in despair, and concluded that Ethel was lost to me, at least for the present. That was only six or seven months ago. So I went home, and spent a month in a shooting-box on the Highlands; then I went to Ireland to visit a friend, and then to London. While there I got a long letter from my mother. The good soul was convinced that I was wasting my life; she urged me to settle down, and finally informed me that she had selected a wife for me. Now I want you to understand, old boy, that I fully appreciated my mother's motives. She was quite right, I daresay, about my wasting my life; quite right, too, about the benefit of settling down; and she was also very kind to take all the trouble of selecting a wife off my hands. Under other circumstances I dare say I should have thought the matter over, and perhaps I should have been induced even to go so far as to survey the lady from a distance, and argue the point with my mother pro and con. But the fact is, the thing was distasteful, and wouldn't bear thinking about, much less arguing. I was too lazy to go and explain the matter, and writing was not my forte. Besides, I didn't want to thwart my mother in her plans, or hurt her feelings; and so the long and the short of it is, I solved the difficulty and cut the knot by crossing quietly over to Norway. I wrote a short note to my mother, making no allusion to her project, and since then I've been gradually working my way down to the bottom of the map of Europe, and here I am.
You didn't see the lady, then?
No.
Who was she?
I don't know.
Don't know the lady?
No.
Odd, too! Haven't you any idea? Surely her name was mentioned?
No; my mother wrote in a roundabout style, so as to feel her way. She knew me, and feared that I might take a prejudice against the lady. No doubt I should have done so. She only alluded to her in a general way.
A general way?
Yes; that is, you know, she mentioned the fact that the lady was a niece of Sir Gilbert Biggs.
What cried Dacres, with a start.
A niece—of Sir Gilbert Biggs? said Dacres, slowly. Good Lord!
Yes; and what of that?
Very much. Don't you know that Minnie Fay is a niece of Sir Gilbert Biggs?
By Jove. So she is. I remember being startled when you told me that and for a moment an odd fancy came to me. I wonder whether your child-angel might not be the identical being about whom my poor dear mother went into such raptures. Good Lord! what a joke! By Jove!
A joke! growled Dacres. I don't see any joke in it. I remember when you said that Biggs's nieces were at the bottom of your troubles, I asked whether it might be this one.
So you did, old chap; and I replied that I hoped not. So you need not shake your gory locks at me, my boy.
But I don't like the looks of it.
Neither do I.
Yes, but you see it looks as though she had been already set apart for you especially.
And pray, old man, what difference can that make, when I don't set myself apart for anything of the kind?
Dacres sat in silence with a gloomy frown over his brow.
Besides, are you aware, my boy, of the fact that Biggs's nieces are legion? said Hawbury. The man himself is an infernal old bloke, and as to his nieces—heavens and earth!—old old as Methusalem; and as to this one, she must be a grandniece—a second generation. She's not a true full-blooded niece. Now the lady I refer to was one of the original Biggs's nieces. There's no mistake whatever about that, for I have it in black and white, under my mother's own hand.
Oh, she would select the best of them for you.
No, she wouldn't. How do you know that?
There's no doubt about that.
It depends upon what you mean by the best. The one you call the best might not seem so to her, and so on.
Now I dare say she's picked out for me a great, raw-boned, red-headed niece, with a nose like a horse. And she expects me to marry a woman like that with a pace like a horse. Good Lord!
And Hawbury leaned back, lost in the immensity of that overwhelming idea.
Besides, said he, standing up, I don't care if she was the angel Gabriel. I don't want any of Biggs's nieces. I won't have them. By Jove! And am I to be entrapped into a plan like that? I want Ethel. And what's more, I will have her or go without. The child-angel may be the very identical one that my mother has selected, and if you assert that she is, I'll be hanged if I'll argue the point. I only say this, that it does not alter my position in the slightest degree. I don't want her. I won't have her. I don't want to see her. I don't care if the whole of Biggs's nieces, in solemn conclave with old Biggs at their head, had formally discussed the whole matter, and finally resolved unanimously that she should be mine. Good Lord, man! don't you understand how it is? What the mischief do I care about anybody? Do you think I went through that fiery furnace for nothing? And what do you suppose that life on the island meant? Is all that nothing? Did you ever live on an island with the child-angel? Did you ever make a raft for her and fly? Did you ever float down a river current between banks burned black by raging fires, feeding her, soothing her, comforting her, and all the time feeling in a general fever about her? You hauled her out of a crater, did you? By Jove! And what of that? Why, that furnace that I pulled Ethel out of was worse than a hundred of your craters. And yet, after all that, you think that I could be swayed by the miserable schemes of a lot of Biggs's nieces! And you stood at a fellow, and get huffy and jealous. By Jove!

After this speech, which was delivered with unusual animation, Hawbury lit a cigar, which he puffed at most energetically.
All right, old boy, said Dacres. A fellow's apt to judge others by himself you know. Don't make any more set speeches, though. I begin to understand your position. Besides, after all—
Dacres paused, and the dark frown that was on his brow grew still darker.
After all what? asked Hawbury, who now began to perceive that another cause besides jealousy was the cause of his friend's gloomy melancholy.
Well, after all, old fellow, I fear I'll have to give her up.
Give her up?
Yes.
That's what you said before, and you mentioned Australia, and that rot.
The more I think of it, said Dacres, dimly, and regarding the opposite wall with a steady yet mournful stare—the more I think of it, the more I see that there is no such happiness in store for me.
Pooh, man! what is it all about? This is the secret that you spoke about, I suppose?
Yes; and it's enough to put a barrier between me and her. Was I jealous? Did I seem huffy? What an idiot I must have been! Why, old man, I can't do anything or say anything.
The man's mad, said Hawbury, addressing himself to a carved tobacco-box on the table.
Ma? Yes, I was mad enough in ever letting myself be overpowered by this bright dream. Here have I been giving myself up to a phantom—an empty illusion—and now it's all over. My eyes are open.
You may as well open my eyes too; for I'll be hanged if I can see my way through this!
Strange! strange! continued Dacres, in a kind of soliloquy, not noticing Hawbury's words. How a man will sometimes forget realities, and give himself up to dreams! It was my dream of the child-angel that so turned my brain. I must see her no more.
Very well, old boy, said Hawbury. Now speak Chinese a little for variety. I'll understand you quite as well. I will, by Jove!
And then, for a fellow that's had experience like mine—before and since—continued Dacres, still speaking in the tone of one who was meditating aloud—to allow such an idea even for a moment to take shape in his brain! What an unmitigated, unmanageable, and unimprovable idiot, ass, dot, and blockhead! Confound such a man! I say; confound him!
And as Dacres said this he brought his fist down upon the table near him with such an energetic crash that a wine flask was sent spinning on the floor, where its ruby contents splashed out in a pool, intermingled with fragments of glass.
Dacres was startled by the crash, and looked at it for a while in silence. Then he raised his head and looked at his friend. Hawbury encroached his glance without any expression. He merely sat and smoked and passed his fingers through his pendant whiskers.
Excuse me, said Dacres, abruptly.
Certainly, my dear boy, a thousand times; only I hope you will allow me to remark that your style is altogether a new one, and during the whole course of our acquaintance I do not remember seeing it before. You have a melodramatic way that is overpowering. Still I don't see why you should swear at yourself in a place like Naples, where there are so many other things to swear at. It's a waste of human energy, and I don't understand it. We wouldn't indulge in soliloquies in South America, would we?
No, by Jove! And look here, old chap, you'll overlook this little outburst, won't you? In South America I was always cool, and you did the hard swearing, my boy. I'll be cool again; and what's more, I'll get back to South America again as soon as I can. Once on the pampas, and I'll be a man again. I tell you what it is, I'll start tomorrow. What do you say? Come.
Oh, no, said Hawbury, coolly; I can't do that. I have business, you know.
Business?
Oh, yes, you know—Ethel, you know.
By Jove! so you have. That alters the matter.
But in any case I wouldn't go, nor would you. I still am quite unable to understand you. Why you should grow desperate, and swear at yourself, and then propose South America, is quite beyond me. Above all, I don't yet see any reason why you should give up your child-angel. You were all raptures but a short time since. Why are you so cold now?
I'll tell you, said Dacres.
So you said ever so long ago.
It's a sore subject, and difficult to speak about.
Well, old man, I'm sorry for you; and don't speak about it at all if it gives you pain.
Oh, I'll make a clean breast of it. You've told your affair, and I'll tell mine. I dare say I'll feel all the better for it.
Drive on, then, old man.

Dacres rose, took a couple of glasses of beer in quick succession, then resumed his seat, then picked out a cigar from the box with unusual fastidiousness, then drew a match, then lighted the cigar, then sent out a dozen heavy volumes of smoke, which encircled him so completely that he became quite concealed from Hawbury's view. But even this cloud did not seem sufficient to correspond with the gloom of his soul. Other clouds rolled forth, and still others, until all their congregated folds encircled him, and in the midst there was a dim vision of a big head, whose stiff, high, curling, crisp hair and massive brow, and dense beard, seemed like some living manifestation of cloud compelling Jove.
For some time there was silence, and Hawbury said nothing, but waited for his friend to speak.
At last a voice was heard—deep, solemn, awful, portentous, ominous, sorrow-laden, weird, mysterious, prophetic, obscure, gloomy, doleful, dismal and apocalyptic.
Hawbury!
Well, old man?
Hawbury!
All right.
Are you listening?
Certainly.
Well—I'm—married!
Hawbury sprang to his feet as though he had been shot.
What! he cried.
I'm married!
You're what? Married? You married!
Some Dacres! not you!—not married?
I'm married!
Good Lord!
I'm married!
Hawbury sank back in his seat, overwhelmed by the force of this sudden and tremendous revelation. For some time there was a deep silence. Both were smoking. The clouds rolled forth from the lips of each, and curled over their heads, and twined in voluminous folds and gathered over them in impenetrable masses. Even so rested the clouds of doubt, of darkness and gloom over the soul of each, and those which were visible to the eye seemed to typify, symbolize, characterize, and body forth the darker clouds that overshadowed the mind.
I'm married, repeated Dacres, who now seemed to have become like Poe's raven, and all his words one melancholy burden bore.
You were not married when I was last with you? said Hawbury at last, in the tone of one who was recovering from a fainting fit!
Yes, I was.
Not in South America?
Yes, in South America.
Married?
Yes, married.
By Jove!
Yes; and what's more, I've been married for ten years.
Ten years! Good Lord!
It's true.
Why, how old could you have been when you got married?
A miserable, ignorant, inexperienced dot, idiot, and brat of a boy.
By Jove!
Well, the secret's out; and now, if you care to hear, I will tell you all about it.
I'm dying to hear, dear boy, so go on.
And at this Scene Dacres began his story.

CHAPTER VIII.
A MAD WIFE.

I'll tell you all about it, said Scene Dacres; but don't laugh, for matters like these are not to be trifled with, and I may take offense.
Oh, bother, as if I ever laugh at anything serious. By Jove! no. You don't know me old chap.
All right then. Well to begin. This wife that I speak of happened to me very suddenly. I was only a boy, just out of Oxford, and just into my fortune. I was on my way to Paris—my first visit—and was full of no end of projects for enjoyment. I went from Dover, and in the steamer there was the most infernal, pretty girl. Black, mischievous eyes with the devil's light in them; hair curly, crisp, frisky, luxuriant, all tossing over her head and shoulders, and an awfully enticing manner. A portly old bloke was with her—her father, I afterwards learned. Somehow my hat blew off. She laughed and laughed. Our eyes met. I made a merry remark. She laughed again, and there we were introduced. She gave me a little felt hat of her own. I fastened it on in triumph with a bit of string, and wore it all the rest of the way.
Well, you understand it all. Of course, by the time we got to Calais, I was head over heels in love, and so was she for that matter. The old man was a jolly old John Bull of a man. I don't believe he had the slightest approach to any designs on me. He didn't know anything about me, so how could he? He was jolly, and when we got to Calais he was convivial. I attached myself to the two and had a glorious time. Before three days I had exchanged vows of eternal fidelity with the lady, and all that, and had gained her consent to marry me on reaching England. As to the old man there was no trouble at all. He made no inquiries about my means, but wrung my hand heartily and said God bless me. Besides, there were no friends of my own to consider. My parents were dead, and I had no relations nearer than consins, for whom I didn't care a pin.
My wife lived at Exeter, and belonged to rather common people; but, of course I didn't care for that. Her own manners and style were refined enough. She had been bred by her father to a very fashionable boarding school, where she had been through the same mould as that in which her superiors had been formed, and she might have passed muster anywhere. Her father was awful fond of her and proud of her. She tyrannized over him completely. I soon found out that she had been utterly spoiled by his excessive indulgence, and that she was the most whimsical, nonsensical, headstrong little spoiled beauty that ever lived. But, of course, all that, instead of deterring me only increased the fascination which she exercised, and made me more madly in love than ever.

Her name was not a particularly attractive one, but what are names! It was Arethusa Wiggins. Now the old man always called her Arry, which sounded like the vulgar pronunciation of Harry. Of course I couldn't call her that, and Arethusa was too infernally long, for a fellow doesn't want to be all day in pronouncing his wife's name. Besides, it isn't a bad name in itself, of course; it's poetic, classic, and does to name a ship of war, but isn't quite the thing for one's home and hearth.
After our marriage we spent the honeymoon in Switzerland, and then came home. I had a very nice estate, and have it yet. You've never heard of Dacres Grange, perhaps—we'll there's where we began life, and a devil of a life she began to lead me. It was all very well at first. During the honeymoon there were only a few outbursts, and after we came to the Grange she repressed herself for about a fortnight; but finally she broke out in the most furious fashion; and I began to find that she had a devil of a temper, and in her fits she was but a small remove from a mad woman. You'll see she had been humored and indulged and petted, and coddled by her old fool of a father, until at last she had grown to be the most whimsical, conceited, tetchy, suspicious, imperious, domineering, selfish, cruel, hard-hearted, and malignant young vixen that ever lived; yet this evil nature dwelt in a form as beautiful as ever lived. She was a beautiful demon and I soon found it out.
It began out of nothing at all. I had been her adoring slave for three weeks, until I began to be conscious of the most abominable tyranny on her part. I began to resist this; and we were on the verge of an outbreak when we arrived at the Grange. The sight of the old hall appalled her for a time, but finally the novelty wore off, and her evil passions burst out. Naturally enough, my first blind adoration passed away, and I began to take my proper position toward her—that is to say, I undertook to give her some advice, which she very sorely needed. This was the signal for a most furious outbreak. What was worse, her outbreak took place before the servants. Of course I could do nothing under such circumstances, so I left the room. When I saw her again she was sullen and vicious. I attempted a reconciliation, and kneeling down I put my arms caressingly around her. Look here, said I, my own poor little darling, if I've done wrong I'm sorry, and—
Well, what do you think my lady did? I don't know.
She kicked me! that's all; she kicked me, just as I was apologizing to her—just as I was trying to make it up. She kicked me! when I had done nothing, and she alone had been to blame. What's more, her boots were rather heavy, and that kick made itself felt unmissably.
I at once arose, and left her without a word. I did not speak to her then for some time. I used to pass her in the house without looking at her. This galled her terribly. She made the house too hot for the servants, and I used to hear her all day long scolding them in a loud shrill voice, till the sound of that voice became horrible to me.
You must not suppose, however, that I became alienated at once. That was impossible. I loved her very dearly. After she had kicked me away my love still lasted. It was a galling thought to a man like me that she a common girl the daughter of a small tradesman, should have kicked me; me, the descendant of Crusaders, by Jove! and of the best blood in England; but after a while pride gave way to love. I tried to open the way for a reconciliation once or twice.
To be continued.

MRS. EMMA BOW,
Waterville, Maine.
Physicians and so-called Dyspepsia Cures failed to give any benefit.
Groder's Botanic Dyspepsia Syrup Brought relief and a permanent cure.
To the Dyspepsia Cure Co.
GENTLEMEN: For four years, I have had a complicated stomach and liver trouble. Blood would rush to my head causing dizziness, and a palpitation of the heart so badly that I fainted many times. After I had tried the best physicians, and two of the leading sarsaparillas, without receiving any lasting benefit, I was recommended to try your Dyspepsia Syrup. One bottle did me so much good that I determined to buy six, under your guarantee to cure me or refund my five dollars. But FOUR bottles accomplished a complete cure and I am again in perfect health; FREE FROM COUGHS, ST. PATRICK'S, NO RUSH OF BLOOD TO THE HEAD; NO PALPITATION OF THE HEART AND A RAVENOUS APETITE. I sleep nicely and am growing fatter than I would like to. Your medicine is SWEET and PALATABLE, far more pleasant than any of the many CURES I have tried, and IT CURES. I will gladly answer any inquiry concerning this statement. Yours respectfully,
MRS. EMMA BOW.
Read our BOTANICAL printed guarantee with every bottle. None genuine unless NO ALCOHOL bearing mark the Beaver; our trade mark, the Beaver. Sold by all Druggists. The Groder Dyspepsia Cure Co., Limited, ST. JOHN, N. B.

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT

Established 1810.

—UNLIKE ANY OTHER.—

Positively Cures Diphtheria, Group, Asthma, Bronchitis, Colds, Tonillitis, Hoarseness, Coughs, Whooping Cough, Catarrh, Influenza, Cholera, Measles, Diarrhoea, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Toothache, Nervous Headache, Sciatica, Lame Back, Sprains in Body or Limbs, Stiff Joints and Strains.

AS MUCH FOR INTERNAL AS FOR EXTERNAL USE.

It is marvelous how many different complaints it will cure. Its strong point lies in the fact that it acts quickly. Relieving all Cuts, Burns and Bruises like Magic. Relieving all manner of Cramps and Chills.

ORIGINATED BY AN OLD FAMILY PHYSICIAN.

All who buy direct from us, and request it, shall receive a certificate that the money shall be refunded if not satisfied. Retail price by mail 35 cts.; 6 bottles, $2.00. Express and duty prepaid to any part of United States or Canada. 177. Valuable pamphlet sent free. J. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

GENERATION AFTER GENERATION HAVE USED AND BLESSED IT.

FURNITURE.

WE have in Stock a Complete Line of Household Furniture at Very Low Prices.

Upholstering

In All its Various Branches Promptly Attended To.

W. E. MILLER & CO

155 Queen St. - Next below Ely Perkin's.

JUST RECEIVED!

Oysters!
Oysters!
Oysters!

—AT—
YORK STREET
Restaurant.

Oysters and Clam Chowders served at a minutes notice.
Hot Lunches at all hours.
Meals of all kinds Cooked to Order.
Persons desiring Board only would find it to their Advantage to patronize us.
The Restaurant is run on the European plan.
Open every Evening until 12 O'clock.
W. A. LINDSAY, - - Manager.

New Fall Winter Goods.

I have Just Received a Beautiful Assortment of Overcoatings in Fancy Cheviots, Meltons, Venetians and Naps, which I will make up in the Latest and Most Fashionable Styles. Fit and Workmanship Guaranteed. Prices all right to suit every pocket; also a New Line of Trowserings.

W. E. SEERY.

Sept. 17th.

Watches and Jewelry

The Best Stock of

MILLINERY

to be found in the city is at the

Millinery Establishment

—OF—
MISS HAYES,
QUEEN ST.

F. J. MCCAUSLAND,
Opp. A. F. Randolph & Sons.
Fredericton, N. B., June 7.

A New Stock of STATIONERY

—AND—
School Supplies,
JUST RECEIVED.

W. T. H. FENETY.

286 Queen Street.

A. L. F. VANWART,

Undertaker and Embalmer,
Upper Side York Street, Fredericton, N. B.

Coffins AND Caskets,

FUNERAL GOODS OF ALL KINDS.

A First-Class Hearse in Connection with the Country. Special Prices for Orders from Neatness and Despatch.

All Sizes.

Harvey's PHOTOGRAPHS.

All Styles.

164 Queen St.

Royal Hotel

Fredericton, N. B.

Mrs. B. Atherton, Prop.
Fredericton, N. B. July, 5th, 91.

LATE IMPORTATIONS
—JUST OPENED AT—
OWEN SHARKEY'S.

Ladies' Dress Goods in Cashmeres, Henriettas, Serges, Suits, Velveteens, etc.
Mantles, Fur Capes, Collars, Fur and Feather Boas.
Cashmere Hose, Gloves, etc.
Pantings, Overcoatings, Ulster Clothing in Ulsters, Overcoats, Reefers and Suits, Shirts, Ties, Collars, Silk Handkerchiefs, Under Clothing and Furnishing goods.
Carriage Rugs, Robes, Blankets, Camp Blanketing and Flannels, Tickings, Towellings, Linens, Grey and White Cottons.
A Lot of odd Coats, Pants and Vests very Cheap.
Remnants Always on Hand.

O. Sharkey.

R. C. MACREDIE,

PLUMBER,
Gas and -:-
-:- Steam
FITTER,
Queen - - Street.
Opp. County Court House.

WE ARE

Constantly Receiving Fresh Supplies of Steer Beef, Spring Lamb, Calves and Mutton of The Best Quality, and keep constantly on hand Corned Beef and Pork, Ham and Fresh Eggs, all of which we sell at the Lowest Prices consistent with the Quality of the Stock We Offer.

Send in your order for a trial.

KELLEHER & SMITH.

BE A MAN

Laocoon in the coils of the fatal serpents was not more helpless than is the man who pines under the effects of disease, excesses, overwork, worry, etc. Rouse yourself. Take heart of hope again and BE A MAN! We have cured thousands, who allow us to refer to them. WE CAN CURE YOU by use of our exclusive methods and appliances. Simple, unfailing treatment at home for Nervous Debility, General or Loss of Failing Manhood, General or Nervous Debility, Weakness of Body and Mind, Effects of Errors or Excesses in Old or Young. Robust, Noble MANHOOD fully Restored. Improvement seen the first day. How to enlarge and strengthen WEAK, UNDEVELOPED ORGANS AND PARTS OF BODY. Men testify from 50 States and Foreign Countries. Write them. Book, explanation and proofs mailed (sealed) free. Address

ERIE MEDICAL CO.,

BUFFALO, N. Y.