LEEISM.

The following very interesting article is taken from the Boston Herald, upon which paper Mr. Lee has obtained employment as a special editorial writer. Read it and be interested:

"It is not often that the Herald prints a sadder or more heartrending story than that which appeared in Saturday's paper. It has all the elements that strongly enlist our sympathies. Mr. Lee, as a youth passed through experiences in which he did himself great credit, and entered upon professional life with prospects as bright as those which have been in the possession of average men. He was burdened with debt, and in order to escape from it by a quick and easy process he resorted to speculations in western grain. This was at the very best a risky proceeding for a wealthy man, and for one who wished to improve his fortunes it was taking risks that were simply maddening and wild. It plunged him still deeper into debt and compelled twisting and turning in every direction to keep his accounts straight. Then in his desperate struggle came the temptation to hypothecate securities not truly belonging to him for his debts, and this was followed by getting deeper and deeper into debt, until his case was hopeless, and he had to take to flight to prevent his arrest as a criminal. During all this terrible struggle, it appears from his story that he never had thought of defaulting or defrauding any one. The tide of things was against him. He struggled and struggled to no purpose, and when he left his home he even had to borrow money enough to take him to Boston. There was none of the cunning depravity of a once good man in his business career. He was simply trying to make the best of things amid adverse circumstances and his story is pathetic and real to the last degree. It represents the trials and temptations of many business and professional men who get into holes and do not know how to get out of them. The honesty and integrity of Mr. Lee speak for themselves, and it is a brave man who turns about in the last ditch and faces the world with his whole story. There are points in this narrative which we need not enlarge upon, but which come home with terrible closeness to the untold experiences of many who are in a similar pinch."

Poor fellow! The writer says he never printed "a sadder or more heartrending story" than the history of Lee's great trials from boyhood to the present time. But on which side this condoner of his case it does not appear, whether it be for Lee's victims or Lee himself. The Herald attends to one side of the story only as if it had no other side. Is it honest for a respectable paper to treat crime in this way and thus mislead its readers through a gushing sympathy for one who, if the writer only knew one half of the other side of the story, would if he has any principle at all join almost everyone on this side of the line in wishing him a suitable situation in the Penitentiary. We are told that the poor fellow was twelve thousand dollars in debt when he married! Then why in the name of common sense did he get married with such a load upon his shoulders? But it is all humbug, which no one but the Herald writer believes to be true, to tell us that a mere boy, having no practice and no money, was called upon to support his mother and family, after the father's death, more especially when we know that the relatives and connections of that family are highly respectable and well to do people! If the Herald man, however, believes this part of the story, he ought to know that a young man unknown as it were, having no means of his own, must have commenced borrowing from the beginning of whom? Who was there to credit an unknown person? Again, has not the whole of his career been one of deception and rascality, a most dangerous man to be at large in any community? Has he not borrowed from high and low to cover up his sins, to ward off the current hastening along his destruction. What does the Herald think of the principle that would insidiously rob poor servant women out of their savings of many years, in one case $1,000 and in another $800; who would take the money for building a church (and he a great churchman, observing all the sacraments and also a lay reader in the church at the very time too, when he had his hands deeply into the pockets of the widow and orphans) and placing it in a gambling pool, called stocks, for the purpose of reprieving his rascally losses, or raising the wind to continue on at his old game. Has the Herald writer any knowledge of the many poor people who have lost all through Lee's villany? If he does not he should withhold his sympathy; if he does he is an arrant knave for calling upon his readers to shed tears over the dreadfully hard lot of this poor fellow.

EXTRAVAGANCE AND CRIME.

The Rev. Mr. McNeill of St. John, delivered an excellent sermon on Sunday last, in his church in St. John, the foundation of which no doubt was the Lee escapade, although of course no name was given. The Rev. gentleman took the opportunity to rake up persons who lived beyond their income and thus became incipient robbers. If it were not that the FREDERICTON GLOBE is published on Saturday and therefore could not reach St. John until the same evening, he should say that the Rev. gentleman had taken his cue from our article of that day wherein we dwelt at considerable length about the conduct of salaried men living beyond their income and borrowed from whoever was silly enough to trust them; and that such officials were really dishonest. A man in St. John or Fredericton with a salary of one thousand dollars especially with a small family, should live handsomely upon it. When they go beyond this and know they have no means to repay their borrowed booty, they are rogues to a very great extent. Here is an extract from the Rev. Mr. McNeill's sermon—see how nicely it suits the purpose, and carries conviction with it:

"Then he went on to show how all this extravagance is related to crime. It cripples a man's power of usefulness, for squandering on luxuries he has nothing for clarity and useful work. It produces pauperism. Many spend every dollar of income, laying up nothing for a rainy day; and then families suffer terribly. Actual crime begins the moment expenditure goes beyond income. To incur debt without the probability of paying it, is to steal. This leads to greater acts of dishonesty. The preacher described a recent typical illustration of the young man deliberately beginning life in debt, increasing it every year, launching out in crime which became more and more inexcusable until he landed in shame, disgrace, irretrievable ruin. The sad story, he said, was a familiar one, and whenever repeated gave new evidence of the close connection between extravagance and crime. If it be true that public corruption is becoming rampant, as the daily press tells us, is it not to be traced to the same source—extravagant living. Every court of justice furnishes evidence. Thousands of defaulters have confessed it. We are hearing again and again the stale, significant confession that men lived beyond their means and bankruptcy became only a question of time. They spent their own; then followed speculation, embezzlement, exposure, downfall, penitentiary. Thousands in prison stepped down thither through extravagance, debt, crime. Thousands of criminals outside of prison walls because their crime was successful were produced in the same way."

THIEVES SURE TO BE CAUGHT.

There is no doubt now that the midnight thieves who have just been busy in Fredericton and St. John are sure to be caught, the evidence being so conclusive as appears by a St. John paper:

"Traces found about the residence of Senator Lewin, at Lancaster, indicate that on the night the residence of Mr. Joseph Scammell was robbed, the burglars contemplated a visit to the senator's. Yesterday a pair of rubber soled shoes, such as those supposed to be worn by the burglars, were found under one of the barns near Mr. Lewin's house, and a match like those at Mr. Girvan's was also picked up. It is supposed that the burglars did not get a chance to enter Senator Lewin's house, owing to some of his family being about until the early morning."

Why bless your dear heart, those old rubbers were thrown under that barn by the Senator himself two years ago, after having used them for four years and considered no longer fit for service. "Give the devil his due" but don't try and fit those old rubbers upon the feet of the burglar. As for that single match found upon the premises, it is to be hoped it has been sent over to the Chief of Police for safe keeping.

NO GOVERNOR YET.

The last brain creation is Mr. George W. Day, the veteran printer of St. John, as per a late St. John paper. Why not, quoth our contemporary—if a member of the medical profession is singled out simply because he is a doctor, why should not the printers have a chance? There is a bright particular star (who sometimes shines by day as well as night) on one of the St. John dailies who would not make a bad governor, provided always &c., &c. What does our present governor think of the composition of the different candidates so far named for his office—to say nothing of a host of others yet to be named? He must certainly blush.

Suspended Work.

Mr. Foster, who had charge of the work on the Howard & Crangle building, had some words with one of the firm yesterday which resulted in the entire force of workmen knocking off.

NOTES AND NOTIONS.

Running Comments on Passing Events.

Sundry Ebulitions in Prose and Rhyme.

How the Domestic, Social and Literary World is Wagging.

A certain lady was once described by a rival as having "organs of hearing which were unfortunately too large for ears and not large enough for wings."

Caller: "I had to wait a long while for my turn to get in to see you."

Busy Man: "Well, I will equalize matters by letting you out immediately."

A country paper has this personal item:—"Those who know old Mr. Wilson of this place personally will regret to hear that he was assaulted in a brutal manner last week, but was not killed."

Sharpe: "I say, Steele, we can settle the case of Smith v. Thompson for £100. That's £50 for you and £50 for me."

Steele: "But how about our client? Where did he come in?"

Sharpe (impatiently): "Oh, give him £10."

The two most absent-minded men on record are the fellow who thought he had left his watch at home and then took it out to see if he had time to go back and get it, and the man who put on his office door a card saying: "Out; we will be back soon," and on his return sat down on the stair step to wait for himself.

"Home once more" muttered the weary man, as he leaned on his well-worn staff and surveyed the village. "The hope that has hitherto buoyed me up now almost deserts me, and I gaze round at the strange faces and shops that have sprung up in the streets. How different is everything from what I left it when a boy!

Where is the old familiar baker's shop round the corner, outside of which we used to spin our tops? Where the cheery old wheelwright? And—can it be possible?—they have pulled down the church and built a—"

"Now, then, get out of this," said the policeman. "Muddleton ain't the place for the likes of you!"

"Muddleton!" echoed the weary traveler. "Where's Puddleton then?"

"And so it was. He had mistaken the road and come to the wrong village."

The Emperor of Germany is often addressed by his subjects in writing in the following stilted style: "Most serene and August Emperor and King, Most Gracious King and Lord." The German newspapers refer to him as "The Allhighest," and generally employ the plural the number, the effect at times being somewhat curious; e.g., they will say, "His Majesty are at Cologne."

The Turkish Sultan's kitchen costs the empire £50,000 annually. The building extends 150 ft. on every side. The dishes are sealed in the kitchen by no less a person than Osman Pasha, and hero of Plevna, and are unsealed in the Sultan's presence.

An admirer of Wagner has lately paid as much as £11 sterling for the portion of the bench at the Angermann Restaurant at Bayreuth, where the "Meister" used to quaff his daily beer. It was not the whole bench, but merely the part where Wagner was wont to sit.

Only one instance in which a lady has changed her name three times in one day is on record. Mr. Croft, son of Sir A. D. Croft, was married at Weigh Hill, Hants, to the eldest daughter of Mr. Marsh, at one time M. P. for Salisbury. The same day the old baronet died suddenly, and his son succeeded him. Thus the lady was in the morning Miss Marsh, in the afternoon Mrs. Croft, and at night Lady Croft.

Immense sums are now being paid by fashionable New Yorkers to operate stars for their services at private houses. Miss Emma Eames, for singing at a large reception recently, received the sum of £200; and it is said that one of the De-Reszkes determinedly refused to sing at a private house until the too tempting offer of £400 for his share in the evening's entertainment made him break through his resolution.

Dumley: "Brown, I understand that Robinson referred to me yesterday as an old fool. I don't think that sort of thing is right."

Brown: "Why, of course it isn't right, Dumley. You can't be more than forty at the outside."

A young lady ate half a wedding cake, and then went to sleep to dream of her future husband. She woke in the middle of the night in a dreadful state of alarm, and declared that she would rather remain single for a thousand years than marry the man she saw in her dream.

Young Man: "I want an engagement-ring for a young lady."

Jeweller: "Yes, sir; about what size?"

Young Man: "I don't know, exactly; but she can twist me round her little finger, if that's any guide."

One of the duties of the Lord Chamberlain, on the occasion of a State concert, is as follows: The member of the Royal Family representing Her Majesty occupies the centre chair on a raised dais; at the end of the room facing the orchestra. Immediately she is seated the Lord Chamberlain bowing very solemnly, approaches, kneels down, and gently takes the right foot of the Royal lady and even more gently places it on a crimson and gold footstool. Then the Lord Chamberlain retires.

A remarkable instance of Shakespeare-enthusiasm has recently been recorded in the case of Dean Burgon, who once passed an October night on a settle in the room in which the Bard of Avon is supposed to have been born, in the expectation that Shakespeare would appear to him in his dreams. The result proved unsatisfactory, the only conceptions being that the sleeper was awakened in the early morning half dead with cold and completely disillusioned. The Dean himself is the authority for the statement.

Prince Bismarck is so proud of the first medal he received that he always wears it even with his grandest decorations. It was presented to him for saving at great personal risk, the life of a groom called Hildebran, whose horse became unmanageable, and dashed with its rider into the Lippener Lake. One day at a public reception a newly-made diplomat came up to Bismarck, and asked what the small unpresented-looking medal meant. He replied: "I have the habit of sometimes saving a man's life."

The most successful of American authors, judged by the power of earning money, is a gentleman whose fame has not yet travelled across the Atlantic. We are told that Mr. J. W. Buel has written fourteen books, the aggregate circulation of which exceeds 2,500,000 copies. His works are all of a religious or philosophical nature, and are sold on the subscription plan. The most popular is his "Beautiful Story," which has reached a sale within only 3,000 of 600,000 copies in less than two years. His last two works, "The Living World" and "The Story of a Man," have both gone beyond 250,000 copies each. During 1888 Mr. Buel's royalties amounted to nearly £7,000, and this year they will exceed £10,000.

"If you purchase Watches, Clocks, Jewellery, or Silverware, before you see our goods and prices."

We do not wish it understood that this is a "Slaughter Sale" or a closing out of old, unseasonable and shop-worn goods. Our Newest, Brightest and Best Goods are included in this offer. We make no sensational offer of goods less than cost, but ALL Goods sold CLOSE. Come in and see us, your reason for buying will be—
