Literary Notice.

"What do the newspapers say about it?" is the thing everybody wants to know when an important political question comes up. The busy man especially feels the need of a journal that will give him in the briefest possible compass, and with uniform fairness, extracts from the leading newspapers of all parts of the country, and of all political shades. Fortunately, one such journal is to be had—just one. For example, when everybody was eager to know what the press of the country had to say about President Cleveland's tariff letter, Public Opinion gave in the space of four pages no less than 76 separate and distinct extracts from as many prominent newspapers, North, South, East and West. No other journal in the world furnishes its readers such comprehensive summaries of editorial comment on current topics. Nor is this all. Beside these four pages of editorial comment on the President's letter, the same issue of Public Opinion contained twenty-two pages of other matter, including nearly a hundred extracts from newspaper editorials, nearly twenty condensed magazine articles on the leading topics of the day, Congressional news, condensed summaries of the general news of the week, American and foreign, etc., etc. This is a sample of what the readers of Public Opinion get every week, 52 times a year, for $2.50, or 6 cents a single copy.

Tried and Sentenced.

The trial of Caserio for the murder of President Carnot began at Lyons, France, on Thursday. The assassin was perfectly calm. He declared to the Judge he was entirely responsible for the crime he committed. In reference to his having been sent to school he added, "If I had been a better scholar I would have been a better man." A few minutes later being asked about his choir boy days, when he represented John the Baptist in church processions, he said: "I was a child then and children, you know unwittingly act stupidly."

Judge Breuille—"Coming to Lyons you stopped at Vienna and went to an anarchist barber's?"

Caserio—"I naturally went to a barber's. I couldn't get my hair cut at a baker's." (laughter.)

The Judge—"A deputation of Lyonnaise anarchists visited you as a personage of importance when you were ill in the hospital at Cete?"

Caserio—"A friend from Lyons visited me and he had some of his friends with him, but they got me nothing."

The Judge—"What! brought you nothing? Didn't they bring you these?" (Producing photographs of Ravachol, Pallas and the Chicago anarchists.)

"No," replied Caserio.

"At any rate they they were similar to these?" retorted the Judge.

"Now you are right," admitted the prisoner.

Throughout this examination the prisoner defended himself against accusations of connection with anarchists with rare skill, fighting the ground inch by inch.

There was a profound sensation in the court room when Assistant Registrar Mathieu removed a covering from the dagger and handed it to the Judge. The weapon was still stained with the blood of the murdered president, and, as the Judge held it up, a thrill of horror ran through the assemblage.

"Is this the one you brought from Cete?" asked the Judge.

"Yes," replied Caserio unflinchingly as he nodded toward the bloody dagger.

As the Judge handled the weapon before passing it to the jury the prisoner was not in the least disconcerted and as the dagger was handed to the jury the criminal calmly brushed a fly from his cheek.

Caserio gave a dramatic account of how he stabbed President Carnot. "I saw the carriage approach, surrounded by some officers on horseback. As the last one of these passed before me I unbuttoned my coat. The dagger—I had it in an inner side pocket at the right side—had the hilt upward, and I took it in my left hand. As I pushed a couple of boys aside I took it in my right hand, while I, unobserved, led the sheath fall. Quickly but without any leap I turned toward the president. I held to the carriage with my left hand and with the right I drove the dagger to the hilt into the breast of Mr. Carnot. As I struck I cried out—I don't know if it was loud or not—Hurrah for anarchy! As soon as I had stabbed him I drew myself back. Then, as I noticed that nobody seized me, and nobody seemed to realize what I had done, I ran alongside the carriage and passed the horses, and once more—this time very loud—yelled 'Hurrah for anarchy!'"

This yell was heard by the police. I tried to break through the crowd of men and women, but they would not let me pass, and a moment after the police had hold of me."

On Friday following Caserio was sentenced to death. As the sentence was pronounced he tottered and with a weak voice said, "Vive social revolution." Then in a louder voice he shouted, "Courage, comrades; vive anarchic."

May Be Insane.

It is feared that Angus McDonald, the fireman of the Canadian Pacific train which was wrecked a few weeks ago at West Outlet, Moosehead Lake, is hopelessly insane.

Within a few hours after the wounded fireman, insensible from the effect of the terrible leap for life which he made, was placed under medical care at Moosehead Inn, he began to recover his physical health. His physical convalescence has continued from that time till this. Until within a few days he has been able to walk about his room, but from the time he recovered from the insensibility he has not had even the briefest interval when his mind was his own or when he could talk on any subject intelligibly, or recognize any of those about them. His physicians anticipated the possibility of a temporary insanity even after he recovered consciousness, but supposed with the improvement of his physical condition his mind would gradually come back to him, but so far this does not prove to be so, and the state of the man's mind more than puzzles them.

In case of any clot being formed upon the brain, there has been ample time for it to have become partially or wholly absorbed, and if the man's mental condition was caused by any fractured bone pressing against the brain it would have been discovered and removed. As a matter of fact it is not believed that either of these contingencies is responsible for the sad state in which the man finds himself at present. It is a strange fact, too, that in all his delirium and wandering of the mind he has not directly or indirectly in the slightest manner alluded to the disaster at West Outlet.

The report of the railroad commissioners is still held back, awaiting the fireman's recovery, and the solution of the mystery now rests entirely upon his testimony as to why he jumped from his engine, but if the apprehensions mentioned are not groundless, the prospects of any further information upon the point are not of the best. Contrary to the intention when the railroad commissioners' hearing ended, McDonald was not removed from that place with the other wounded, but has remained there ever since under the care of the road physicians. Next week, however, it is the plan to have him taken to Montreal, where he will receive the best medical attendance it is possible to procure in that city.

Geo. Y. Crookshank, son of R. W. Crookshank, of St. John, and for some time Sir Leonard Tilley's private secretary, died in Ottawa on Sunday last.
