DR. THOMSON'S MED. CO.,—Dear Sirs: My wife having been a sufferer from indigestion and languor, was induced to try your Sarsaparilla. The result is miraculous. She was relieved by one bottle. Her appetite the best for years. As an alterative and tonic it has no superior. This statement, for the benefit of suffering humanity, we give freely.

Renovated Rubbish.

Among the many kinds of nonsense which is now commonly written by people who wish to make a noise, none is more absurd than the nonsense about marriage. Only write something sickly or stupid about wedlock, and you are almost certain to be well advertised. In their deep, exhaustive ignorance, the prattlers probably do not know that most, if not all, of the self-contradictory dogmas have been invented, proclaimed, laughed at, and have disappeared, pretty often in the course of modern emancipation. The subject is not a very easy one for a moderately self-respecting writer to dilate upon. The new male and female wisecracks contradict themselves and each other too freely and too frequently. "What should a young lassie do wi' an old man?" or with a young man, or any number of men of all sorts of ages? After examining a variety of gospels, thought to be "new" by their inspired authors, one remains in doubt. Thus, one lassie, an heiress, tries to overcome the virtue of a rude farmer to whom she is betrothed. "The rigid agriculturist prevailed"; he maintained a moral standard, compared to which that of the famous conventioner, holy, holy, Samuel Rutherford, was low. The heiress then fled away swiftly, and married a peer whose mind and body afforded the most startling examples of heredity in its most undesirable results. I think she then killed herself. They often do. Why the wretched woman behaved in this way, where the "gospel" comes in, what the gospel is, and where interest of such silly proceedings lies coyly hidden, I do not pretend even to guess. If it is nasty (as I think it is), yet it is not new. Women have stooped to indescribable folly before today.

This miserable bundle of nerves did get married, however, which was strangely conservative. The by no means new rubbish of the day represents pure-souled young women as panting for matrimony, but they nearly blush themselves into an apoplexy at the thought of holy matrimony. To become the parent of a little boy or girl at once, with no antiquated legal or religious flummery, seems to be the ideal. But suddenly we are told, "Oh, no! no little boys or girls can be permitted to disturb these natural and romantic unions of pure souls." The romantic and natural aspects of these dogmas (though appreciated by the Zulus) are sadly to seek. But there is always a possibility of being more grotesquely absurd than one's rivals, and perhaps the very height of folly is reached by the heroine who marries with no more sense of shame or servitude than any sane girl, but mounts her high moral eminence, on the pleasing prospect of welcoming a little stranger. This, she vows, is quite too shockingly improper to be calmly contemplated by a pure-minded female! Why the public ever peruses all this mass of fudge it is not for me to guess. It is not entertaining except as a thing may entertain by dint of sheer, solemn, owl-like want of humour. It is not within the range of practical, political, or social absurdity. Girls are not so silly as to throw away their lives and reputations for a crotchet. They know well enough that the path to this Paradise is all downhill, and, in fact, that a man wants a settled establishment, and will very soon leave the most pure-souled but unwedded lady prig, if, indeed, she does not begin by leaving him. And why not! Ex hypothesi there is nothing wrong in the conduct of the changeful lovers, there is no disgrace in bolting from a woman or a man when you chance to begin to prefer some other man or woman. If this be a mistaken theory of mine, there can be no such thing as Free Love, and an emancipated moralist might just as well get married as not!—Andrew Lang, in the "Illustrated London News."

A Celebrated Case.
The trial of the Hyams brothers—Harry P. and Dallas T.—on the charge of which they stand accused, that of William Wells in their warehouse in January, 1893, is going on now at Toronto.

Public attention was first called to Harry P. Hyams and Dallas T. Hyams about the first of February last, when a Toronto paper published a sensational story with reference to the placing of $300,000 on the life of Mrs. Harry P. Hyams. Nine years ago these two, twin brothers, came to Canada from New Orleans, and seven years ago started a warehouse on Colborne st. in Toronto, having previously been located in Kingston. In their employ was a young man named William Wells. One day, while working around the freight hoist, the balance-weight became unhooked and fell on him. Wells' head was crushed, and he died immediately, at least this was the decision of the coroner's jury. Wells carried $36,000 of life insurance, which was payable to his sister Martha, and who, shortly after receiving the money, married Harry P. Hyams. The Colborne street warehouse was then abandoned, and later on, the Hyams moved to Montreal, where they were engaged in the manufacture of inks.

About the last week of January last the manager of the French department of the Sun Life Insurance Company and his assistant followed Harry P. Hyams and his wife from Toronto to Montreal, where applications had been made by Harry Hyams to several companies for policies on the life of Mrs. Hyams to the amount of $300,000. Hyams accompanied his wife to each of the offices and advised her as to the best system. He afterwards applied through his lawyer for the return of the applications which, of course was refused. The policies were to be made in favor of Mrs. Hyams' heirs. At first Mrs. Hyams was not aware of the amount of insurance that had been applied for, but becoming acquainted with the facts, she was at once alarmed and consulted her attorneys. She refused to return to Montreal with her husband. Then the detectives got wind of the affair and started to look up Hyams' past record with the result that Harry and his brother were arrested on suspicion of killing young Wells. All the Companies, with the exception of one, when notified of the facts immediately dropped the applications. When Harry P. Hyams threatened action against everybody and everything in sight. Both brothers were arrested on Tuesday, February 12, on charge of having "feloniously, wilfully and with malice aforethought killed and murdered William C. Wells on January 16, 1893."

At the preliminary examination it was shown that there was no person in the building at the time of Wells' death, excepting Harry P. Hyams, the man who had placed the heavy insurance on Wells' life, and to whose sister he was engaged. Hyams' claim, at the time of the death, was that he found the body lying at the foot of the elevator shaft. His explanation was that Wells' was making some repairs at the foot of the hoist, and that the balance weight, becoming unhooked, fell on him crushing in his head and killing him. An investigation by the insurance companies failed to produce any facts, and the insurance was paid over to Martha Wells. The examination of Hyams lasted a month and ended in there being committed for trial by Magistrate Denison.

Mr. B. E. Osler, Q. C. and Crown attorney, is prosecuting, and E. F. B. Johnston, ex-deputy attorney general, and T. W. Horn are defending them. Walter L. Wellman, the ex-district attorney of New York city, is associated with the defence in the case.

The purifying effects of Ayer's Sarsaparilla are sure and speedy. Take it this month.

Tired of Trilby.

O, Trilby, I fail you were buried so deep,
That Gabriel's horn could not break your last sleep.
I long, with Svengali, to gloat o'er your bones,
And to smother in ashes your hypnotic tones,
Peace, peace to your soul, and your mem'ry be blest,
But chase yourself, Trilby, and give us a rest.

"Cold Water to a Thirsty Soul."

Rev Isaac Baird, Templeton, Cal., well known in Canada: "I have tried K. D. C. and also the Pills, and find them just the thing—vastly better than what the doctor ordered. The very first dose of K. D. C. helped me and now that miserable headache is all gone, and also that oppressed feeling that I have suffered from for months. I never mean to be without K. D. C. again: no medicine I have ever taken worked like it; it is like cold water to a thirsty soul. This is the second time I have tried K. D. C. and there is no failure or disappointment."

A Big Dig.

The ship canal between the Baltic and Black Seas will be about 1,000 miles long. There are no formidable engineering difficulties. The estimated cost is £20,000,000, and the construction will occupy five years. The canal will be 27 feet deep, 213 feet wide at top, and 114 feet wide at bottom. It is to run from Riga, follow the course of the Dvina, Beresina, and Dnieper, and end at Cherson. The canal will be lighted by electricity along its whole length, enabling the transit to be performed in six days, reckoning six knots as a maximum speed.
