DR. THOMSON'S MED. CO. — Dear Sirs: My wife having been a sufferer from indigestion and languor, was induced to try your Sarsaparilla. The result is miraculous. She was relieved by one bottle. Her appetite the best for years. As an alterative and tonic it has no superior. This statement, for the benefit of suffering humanity, we give freely.

GOD IS LOVE.

God loveth us. In pain or bliss O heart, be true and strong! God loveth us, and knowing this We know life's sweetest song! God loveth us, O hands that grasp At human tenderness, And then in emptiness unclasp! He waits to fill and bless, God loveth us, O weary feet That find the journey long! His love provides a rest so sweet The hope of it makes strong! God loveth us, O eyes that find Life's lesson hard to read! By tears of loss made dim and blind, Learn his great love instead. God loveth us, O fallen one! Creep upward to the light— God's radiant star shines on and on Until the dawn grows bright. God loveth us—the world grows old Yet falls the light and dew. God loveth us—the world grows old, But love if ever new.

The Mother of Science.

It is a matter of comparatively small consequence for us to know either how long a time was occupied in bringing the world into its present condition, or by what process employed for that purpose. Nor is it more important for us to know at what time, or by what process, man was fashioned and brought into being. But it is a matter of transcendent importance that we should understand what we are ourselves, what is our significance and what are our relations to the world in which we stand. This is important, not the other; and this is what has been written by the unknown poet-prophet in the first chapter of Genesis.

What, first of all, this poet-prophet of the olden time saw, behind all the phenomena of nature a great order, and therefore a great Orderer; a Someone who called this nature into existence, and shaped and patterned it for a purpose. The phenomena by which man is surrounded are not a mere series of disconnected phenomena; they have a unity, a significance; and their unity and significance was traced back by this unknown with a poet's vision to the one great God who rules over them all. The meaning of the first part of the first chapter of Genesis is one God, the Creator of the heavens and the earth. This ancient faith is wrought into that oldest creed of Christendom—I believe in One God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth. And we must remember that when this chapter was written, all men did not see this one simple truth; that in the pagan philosophy of that olden time it was still a debated question whether God made the world or the world made God; that according to some forms of pagan philosophy, attempted to be revived even in our own time, spirit emanated from matter, matter did not proceed from nor was created by spirit.

Next to this truth, God first, matter and its forms second, he saw and set forth the supremacy of man—because man is spirit—over nature. He affirmed that the God who has made this world has given man dominion over it; over the sea and over the land, over the cattle and over the birds, over all the living things that are in it, and over all the powers and force of nature. And we must remember, too, that at the time when this chapter was written the deification of the powers of nature was common; that men worshiped nature; that, in the thoughts of men, nature was god and man was the servant. The first chapter of Genesis reverses this common conception, and declares that nature is the servant and man is the master, because man, not nature, is in the likeness of God. All science has its root in this great spiritual declaration that God has given man dominion over the world. Long before science had plodded its way to the declaration that we have both the right and the power to use electricity and fire and water and steam and gravitation, that we may take all the powers of nature and use them, this prophet of the olden time had seen this truth and flashed it as in a sudden vision upon the eyes of men. The world is put under man's control, he said; lay hold on the lightning and draw it down to earth and set it to do your service; reach out your arm over the sea and make it the place whereon your ships shall ride; lay hold on the water and on the fire and join them together, and when out of their wedlock steam has come, make it your servant to do your drudgery for you. All the powers of nature are yours; you are the sceptered being of this world; reign over it. This, not a scientific statement of the time or method of creation, or the antiquity of man, is the truth that lies revealed in the first chapter of Genesis. To believe this, not to believe that God was six days making the world, or that he made it in a particular order, or that man has lived on it for six thousand years, or was made of clay and then inspired with life, is to believe in the prophecy of that sublime Psalm of Praise to the Creator of nature and of man.—Outlook.

His Complaint of the Boss.

Mr. X. is a contractor of philanthropic tendencies. He attends the meetings of his workmen, he goes to call on them regularly twice a year, and if a workman is about to leave he always wants to know the reason why. Hence, when last Thursday his book-keeper told him that Pat Mulcahey was going to leave, Mr. J. immediately requested the pleasure of Pat's company in the inneroffice. "Well, well, Pat," he began, "what's this I hear about you leaving? What's the matter? Haven't I always treated you well?" "Indade ye have, sorr," replied Pat. "Well, what's the trouble?" "It's that boss, Smith. Shure, yesterday he took me away from me hod an' bricks, an' sint me away out on a hill that was covered wid rocks. He put me on the top, wid a shteel rod in me hand. 'Drill a hole there,' says 'e. An' I squatted down wid a hammer an' the rod, an' I worruked for two hours, makin' a foine nate hole. An' then, will ye believe it, sorr, a fool came along an' filled the foine hole wid powder and blew it all to thunder, an' I'll not do that fool thrick ag'in."—Boston Budget.

Late news from Nicaragua is as follows.—The Nicaraguan government having through the Salvadorean minister at London accepted the modified ultimatum of the British Government, the dispute between the two countries is practically at an end. As stated exclusively in the Associated Press despatches, orders were cabled from London to Rear Admiral Stephenson, commanding the squadron at Corinto, directing him to evacuate the port today. The warships presented a scene of orderly bustle this morning, giving evidence that something out of the usual course was going on. Boats passed frequently between the vessels, with little midshipmen in charge, wearing an air of greater importance than usual. They were evidently bearers of communications to Captain Trench, of the Royal Arthur, who had been appointed by Admiral Stephenson governor of the port. The force originally landed by the British to hold the place was four hundred bluejackets and marines, but on Friday, when it became known that the tension had become relaxed, all of them, with the exception of fifty-eight marines and their officers, were withdrawn. Shortly after the flag denoting that religious services were in progress on board the warships was hauled down, the marines, who had been drawn up in front of the custom house, were ordered to return to their ships. A few minutes later the British flag was hauled down from the government building and soon the soil of Nicaragua was rid of the British invaders, and the long strokes of the sailors were sweeping the heavy boats to the warships lying in the harbor.

Hundreds of persons assembled along the shore to see the embarkation of the marines, and a cheer went up as the noses of the boats headed harborward. The warships were soon riding at short cables, but their departure was delayed by the tide, which did not serve until the afternoon. It was expected that the flagship would depart with the other two vessels of the fleet, but when the water was high enough on the bar to permit of the passing of the vessel, only the Wild Swan and the Satellite got underway, and with the red ensign of Britain floating in the breeze stood out to sea.

The flagship, the Royal Arthur, paid out her cables and this fact was believed to confirm a report that she would salute the Nicaraguan flag when the government re-possessed itself of the port.

As has been before related in these despatches, Nicaragua has agreed to pay the $77,500 demand by Great Britain for the expulsion of pro-consul Hitch and for other alleged damages to British subjects arising from the recent troubles in the Mosquito reservation, but instead of paying the money at the cannon's mouth, she will pay it in London fifteen days after the last vessel of the British fleet withdraws from Corinto.

There are other questions of damages to British subjects to be settled, but Nicaragua believes that if the questions are submitted to an impartial commission the judgment will be rendered in her favor.
