DR. THOMSON'S MED. CO.,—Dear Sirs;
My wife having been a sufferer from indigestion and languor, was induced to try your Sarsaparilla. The result is miraculous. She was relieved by one bottle. Her appetite the best for years. As an alterative and tonic it has no superior. This statement, for the benefit of suffering humanity, we give freely.

Degrading Literature.

I do maintain that life can be dealt with fully and honestly only when it is considered from a healthy and manly (or womanly) point of view. I deny that the morbid extravagances of hysterically neurotic and erotic imagination are to be accepted as a sound basis or a proper sphere of analysis for either art or literature; I am assured that there are some subjects in themselves so repellent, so enervating, and so unprofitable, that they should be practically excluded from the domain of literary discussion or artistic representation. And I consider that it is the absolute duty of every public writer who is engaged in the department of criticism to discourage and condemn work of such character, and even work which leads more or less directly toward it.

I have no right, perhaps, to judge men of whose motives and whose necessities I am practically ignorant; but, as a critic of twenty years' standing, I have not only the right but the obligation to judge their work when I believe that work to be vitally affecting the public welfare. It is my sincere conviction that during the past ten years most of the new departures which have been made in the arts have been mistaken from the esthetic point of view, and have been injurious to the moral. I know that if our literature and art are to flourish in the future, they must be in accordance with the great work of the past, with the idiosyncrasies of our national character, and with those decencies and restrictions of thought and emotion which have become a part, and the best part, of ourselves.

I believe the day will come, and that very shortly, when the present revolt against belief and modesty will cease to be a distinguished mark of art, our literature, and our journalism. I believe that we shall cease to imitate the worst vices of our French neighbors, and to glory in the imitation. I believe that music-hall comedies will cease to receive the wages of Prime Ministers. I believe that actors and actresses will return to their proper place—the place, that is, of paid servants of the public, who are esteemed, not only for excellence in the profession to which they belong, but only in so far as their lives are decent and their abilities genuine. I believe that sensational journalism has had its day, and that the level of the servants' hall is that to which it is doomed quickly to descend. I believe that novelists will soon not dare to publish what they certainly would not dare to speak. I believe that critics will be afraid to praise such productions. I believe that editors will be ashamed to employ the critics who do. I believe that poets will recur to the old beauties of the world, which are not identified with what we used to call vice and blasphemy. I believe that painters will find better subjects than are now furnished them in East-End public-houses and West-End music-halls. And I believe that, partly in consequence of these changes, we shall laugh more and sneer less; that our girls will no longer imitate our manners and our costume, but be content with their own, which are, after all, infinitely better; and that our men will no longer struggle after a pretence of effeminacy which sits upon them extremely ill. And, lastly, I believe that somehow, after some strange, unexpected fashion, there will come back into the world some substitute for the old faith in God, and reverence for those things which are fair, lovely, and of good report.—Mr. Quilter, in the "Contemporary Review."

The Future of Spain.

Spaniards have sometimes reproached Englishmen with being too indifferent to the past glories of that country and, above all, to its magnificent literature, and at first blush there is something in the complaint. For a hundred readers of Goethe or Racine there is not one to whom the tongue of Cervantes is familiar. Students of Dante are numerous, and the interest in Italian literature has never since Elizabethan days wholly died out among Englishmen. But how many of us know anything as to the romances or dramas or ballads of Spain? Could an ordinary educated Englishman give the names of, say, three of her chief authors in her days of glory? The chances are that the man who is fairly well read even in second-rate French authors and has dipped into the chief Italian poets is ignorant of the existence of the great Spaniard classics with the single exception of the immortal Cervantes. All that must be admitted, and yet as some slight extenuation it may be remembered that to a few Englishmen and Americans Spaniards themselves owe enlightenment as to their past. Robertson and Prescott have not been rendered obsolete by native writers, and in Ticknor's laborious volumes the Spaniard who would understand the growth of his own literature will find as accurate guidance as at the hands of any of his countrymen.

One who did much to instruct the world as to Spanish history has somewhere pointed out that we are apt to make a great mistake in assuming that the glorious days of Spain can only be in the past. The resources of her soil, the advantages of her position, are great. The mass of the people are marked by solid virtues of their own. They are the same race of people who twice drove back the Crescent from the shores of Europe, and twice saved from shipwreck the great cause of Christian civilization. They have shown the same spirit at Saragossa that they showed two thousand years before at Saguntum. To this student of their history it seemed that a future awaited them not unworthy of their ancient fortunes and fame—not in vain attempts to bring back the days of Charles V., but in self-development. The awakening may have already come. It may be indicated by the brilliant modern school of novelists of whom those who know them best speak most admiringly. They are revealed by the many changes which visitors to the country cannot fail to discern. It may be signalled by the festivities at Plymouth, where the hand extended to us in friendship had been warmly grasped. The demonstration is not the less real and valuable because it is unprompted by statesmen and is the outcome of unstudied good will.—London Times.

King David as a General.

The biblia (a journal of Oriental research in archaeology, religion, &c.) says:—M. Dieulafoy has discovered the scene of King David's operations in the Valley of Rephaim, when by his change of movements, as described in the Bible, he completely upset all the calculations of the Philistines, and not only gained the victory over them for that day, but compelled them to accept very hard terms of peace. His tactics were the following: He brought forward his flank, then made a rapid change of front, and so entirely shut in the left side of the Philistine ranks that they fell an easy prey to his men. These says M. Dieulafoy, were precisely the same movements as were used in the year 1714 by Frederick II., at Mollwitz, and again in 1757 at Rossbach, and they were again employed with such signal success against the Austrians at Austerlitz. The manoeuvres employed at Rephaim were, so far as we have any record of military display, entirely new, and we must therefore give all the credit of their ingenuity to David. The shepherd king here displayed not only remarkable powers of thinking out his plans, but he must have possessed great skill in the training of the troops, to have brought them to the required stage of obedience and promptitude. We need not wonder, in the light of these extraordinary gifts, that he should have succeeded in his campaigns and in establishing the kingdom of Israel firmly in the midst of its enemies. In examining the district, M. Dieulafoy has come to the conclusion that David used every natural advantage which the country afforded, and lost no point which could have proved of help to him in his position.

Manitoba Crops.

The Manitoba government has published an official crop bulletin. It is learned it will give the probable yield as follows: Wheat, 30,000,000 bushels; oats, 22,000,000 bushels; barley, nearly 6,000,000 bushels; total between fifty-seven and fifty-eight million bushels. If the potatoes and other products are added to this it will be seen that the yield is enormous. This estimate is exclusive of the Northwest Territories, which will largely increase the total.

All Recommend It.

Ask your physician, your druggist and your friends about Shiloh's Cure for Consumption. They will recommend it. Sold by Garden Bros.
