DR. THOMSON'S MED. CO.—Dear Sirs; My wife having been a sufferer from indigestion and languor, was induced to try your Sarsaparilla. The result is miraculous. She was relieved by one bottle. Her appetite the best for years. As an alternative and tonic it has no superior. This statement, for the benefit of suffering humanity, we give freely.

Science in Farming.

Frank W. Hawley, one of the gentlemen interested in the Niagara Electric Power Company, and a scientific farmer, has a model place near Rochester, N. Y. Writing on the subject of the farmer of the future, he says:

The new era for the farmer has just begun. In no domain of human activity lies greater scope for genius than in agriculture. No other calling is so conducive to health, longevity and happiness. Science lays discoveries at the farmer's feet and implores their use. For him the chemist toils in his laboratory. For him the botanist gleans the fields. For him the inventor has simplified labor and enlightened toil. For him scholars and experts employed by the government are ever at work at state and national experiment stations to solve the problems of the soil. The broad-minded agriculturist who avails himself of these researches and discoveries is a man to be envied. We may yet attain the art of making malleable glass, and under such protection acres may be devoted to the growth of vegetables and semi-tropical fruits for our local markets. Rapid transit and improved refrigerator cars will enlarge the territory to be supplied. The broad belts of the temperate zones extending round the world will be explored in search of new varieties of grain trees, flowers and shrubs for our use. The laws of animal breeding and heredity will be better understood and our domestic stock be greatly improved. America will possess the finest cattle in the world, and the states fitted for cattle raising and dairying will vie with one another for the leadership.

The electric age will materially improve the condition of the agriculturist. I look for the day when each farmer will own an electric equipment to furnish power for his creamery, for grinding food, for pumping water, for lighting his house, and for heating his greenhouse and other buildings. Electric roads will pass his door, affording quick transit for himself and his product to the nearest market town. His horses will labor on the farm while he journeys on the highway in a wagon propelled by a storage battery. The subtle energy can be made to serve him in a thousand ways and perform innumerable tasks. By its kindly aid the hitherto overworked farmer may become largely a gentleman of leisure. Then will he have liberty to assume the political importance to which he is justly entitled. The successful farmer should be the coming man, and future legislation must look closely to his interests. It is a notable fact that many of our best and ablest men have exhibited a strong predilection for rural life. Webster delighted to retire to Marshfield; the name of Jefferson recalls Monticello; Jackson reminds us of Hermitage; Clay is associated with his beloved Ashland; Mount Vernon has been rendered classic ground as the abode of the Father of his Country. With the advance of this new era, from the rural home, beautiful by nature and adorned by art, saving influences will come in the future to guide and guard the future of Canada.

Britain and the Colonies.

At a banquet in London given in honor of the opening of the Natal railway, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, secretary for the colonies made an important speech. He said: Great Britain was approaching a critical stage in the history of her relations with the autonomous colonies. Upon their opinions of her policy during the next few years, certainly the next generation, would depend the future of the British Empire. This hung together on a thread so slender that even a breath might sever it. Not long ago statesmen despaired of the possibility of maintaining a permanent union, foreseeing that a time would come when colonies having attained a position of independence must be expected to claim an entire separation. This time had arrived sooner than expected. These great communities had taken rank with the nations of the world. He did not suppose the idea of compelling them to remain in the empire was within the range of intelligent speculation. Yet, notwithstanding that the time had come for these conditions to be fulfilled, the expectancy of the statesmen referred to had not been realized. As the possibility of a separation had become greater, the desire had become less, until it no longer existed. Great Britain on her part was prepared to do all that could fairly be expected of her. The mother country rejoiced greatly at the wider patriotism, embracing the whole of Great Britain. He believed the slender thread of which he had spoken was capable of carrying a force of sentiment and sympathy which would be a potent factor in the history of the world, just as a slender wire would carry an electric force capable of moving machinery. He heard on all hands that Imperial Federation was a vain, empty dream. He would not contest this opinion, but men must be blind who did not see that it was a dream that impressed itself on the minds of the English-speaking race, the sort of dream which, somehow or other, becomes eventually unaccountably realized. The signs of the times were already in the direction of such a movement. Mr. Chamberlain concluded with an appreciative reference to the African colonies.

15 Years of Itching.

Wm. Golding, commercial traveller, 30 Esthert-st. Toronto, says: For 15 years I suffered untold misery from Itching Piles, sometimes called pin worms. Many and many weeks have I had to lay off the road from this trouble. I tried eight other pile ointments and so called remedies with no permanent relief to the intense itching and stinging, which irritated by scratching would bleed and ulcerate. One half a box of Chase's Ointment cured me completely.

"Going to live in the country, eh? Yes. 'I suppose the city air doesn't agree with your family?' 'Well, city air don't agree with my pocketbook.'"

CHRONIC HEADACHE.

The change in my Mother's condition marvellous. Scott's Sarsaparilla is a Boon.

MONTREAL, August 20th, 1895. GENTLEMEN:—There is such a change in my mother's health that I cannot restrain myself from writing you. She suffered for years past with a chronic headache, accompanied with a disordered stomach. She was weak and irritable, and we thought she was going into a decline. For three weeks she has been taking a course of Scott's Sarsaparilla, which was recommended to her by Mr. McGale, Druggist, Montreal. Her headache is now but a memory, her appetite is good, and she has gained five pounds in weight in twelve days. She is a different woman, and I feel that you, in God's hands, have been the means of restoring her to health. I shall always recommend Scott's Sarsaparilla to sufferers from head or digestive troubles. Thanking you again, I close.

Yours sincerely,
Hortense Gaviliere.

Scott's Sarsaparilla is a concentrated extract, pleasant to the taste, and is taken in small doses. It is the finest remedy for disorders of the stomach and liver, palpitation, scrofulous sores, eczema and skin diseases arising from impurities of the blood. It builds up the weak, the strong it maintains in health. $1 of all druggists.

Death of Eugene Field.

Eugene Field died of heart disease recently in Chicago.

Eugene Field has earned a unique reputation as a writer of verse.

His strong points were humor and pathos. He was distinguished by his love for children, who inspired much of his writings.

Field was a contemporary in western journalism of James Whitcomb Riley and Bill Nye, and had in the spirit and peculiarly western qualities of his work something in common with both.

They all saw together the vicissitudes of pioneer journalism in western towns, and absorbed the spirit of the humorous crudities of that unformed stage of American society. It remained a distinct quality of Field's verse. Field was perhaps the one Chicago man of letters to enjoy a national popularity, and had been the literary lion of that city.

Eugene Field was born in St. Louis in 1850. When six years old his mother died, and he was placed in charge of a cousin at Amherst, Mass.

When 17 he entered Williams College. Shortly after his graduation from this school his father died in St. Louis, and Eugene went west and completed his education in the State University of Missouri.

When he attained his majority he fell into a large fortune, which he at once began to spend in the purchase of books. To make easy the pursuit he went to Europe and returned laden with spoils from the book shops of London and Paris, but with scarcely any of his fortune.

Then he turned to newspaper work, and enlisted on the local staff of the St. Louis Journal, of which he soon became city editor. In 1875 he drifted to St. Joseph, Mo., afterward returning to St. Louis, where he wrote editorial paragraphs for The Times, and The Times-Journal, when the two papers combined. In 1880 he took a table on the Kansas City Times and a year later went to Denver and was managing editor of the Tribune of that city.

In 1883 Mr. Field went to Chicago and began his work of writing editorial matter for the News, filling a place he had held ever since.

His principle works are "Culture's Garland," "Memoranda of the Gradual Rise of Literature in Chicago," with introduction by Julian Hawthorne.

CHICAGO, Nov. 6.—While his sorrow-stricken friends listened to the soft music of the anthem, the words of which came from the soul of Eugene Field, the body of the poet was borne from the church to its last resting place today. It was a remarkable funeral in many respects. For the number of friends who gathered to pay their last tribute of respect to the man they had loved; for the deep sorrow and keen sense of personal bereavement that bore heavily upon them all; for the mass of testimonials sent by those who had loved Eugene Field; for the genial warmth of his kindly heart; for the pathos and beauty that had ever surrounded his use of his glorious gift of song, by those who honored him for his genius and loved him for himself; especially was it noteworthy for the quality of men who stood around the bier. They came from every rank of life, from the bench and the bar and the studio, and from the physician's study. The clergy touched elbows with the actor, and the merchant and statesman stood side by side. Not only from his admirers in America came the tribute of lasting regard, but messages of grief and condolence from London, Paris and other cities of the old world, told how highly he was esteemed and deeply loved by his friends beyond the sea.

An Anglo-American Alliance

In an article on the International yacht racing by "The Times," allusion is made to the love of fair play which comes down to both nations alike from common ancestors. The allusion is a happy one. It cannot too often be impressed on both Americans and Britons that they are really the same people, having common ancestors, and the time is rapidly approaching when the alliance between the two branches of the family will be so close as to give them a preponderating influence throughout the world. Our esteemed contemporary, the Toronto "News" dealing with subject of an Anglo-American alliance says:—

The formation of an Anglo-American alliance for offensive and defensive purposes would make the English speaking race so pre-eminently dominant among the powers that an outbreak of war would be impossible if they said nay. The feeling in England has always of late years been kindly to the Republic. The better classes of the Americans undoubtedly are friendly to Great Britain. Both countries have wealth and population. Single handed they are both more or less powerful; united they would be irresistible.

The establishment of an Anglo-American alliance is what all Advanced Thinkers seek for, and their success is nearer than is generally expected. The forces of nature are wiping out frontiers and consolidating territorial divisions. Italy and Germany have each absorbed numerous nationalities. The same forces will bring about the Anglo-American alliance, and the Federation of the world would be the prelude to the blessed time when war will cease and there will be "Peace on Earth."—Ex.

He Blew off the Froth.

He sipped his brandy and soda in a dejected sort of way and gazed wearily out of the club windows.

"No," he said to the young man with the high collar, "I'm not going to be married. That is, unless I will sign the temperance pledge, and I won't do that for any woman. It would have been all right if the girl's mother hadn't learned that I drank."

"Who told her?" asked the tall collared person.

"I did," replied the sad young man "Met the girl and her ma on the street the other day and invited them to come and have a glass of soda. Idiomatic, wasn't it? Oh, yes, I was saying to her ma I never drink anything intoxicating. A mild drink like this is sufficient for any young man."

"And then I lifted a glass of soda to my lips, blew off the froth, said 'Here's how!' and gulped it down. Well the old lady looked horrified, and Ella said, 'Why Jack! Then there was a long talk with her ma and her pa the next day and here I am. Inconvenient to be absent minded, isn't it?'"
