

THE TEACHER.

By Henry Harvey Stuart, Principal of the Benton, C. C. School.

The school teacher occupies a most exalted position in society. The importance of his office is scarcely secondary to that of the parent and religious advisor. Between the ages of four and six the majority of the country's children come to him to be educated. The parent resigns, for about thirty hours a week all control of his children to the teacher. Coming to him at that tender age, when their wills have scarcely begun to develop, a vast responsibility is thrown upon the teacher's shoulders. He has the moulding of the characters of the rising generation of men and women in his hands. How glorious a task to attempt the development of their minds and bodies in the right direction? How infamous for a teacher, intentionally or otherwise, to divert those young minds from the path of honor and duty? How careful he should be that he sets an example, at all times and in all places, worthy of his pupils imitating? Young children are very imitative, but they incline more to the cultivation of evil habits than of good ones. The evil seems to be a part of their nature, and can only be subdued or checked by the most painstaking and patient perseverance on the part of the teacher. Still, if the teacher embodies in his own person those virtues and qualities necessary to a successful instructor of youth, his pupils will soon begin to fall in line with his example. If the teacher be pleasant, kind and courteous to his pupils, he will have a mighty influence over their manners and habits, for every child is susceptible to kindness and reasonable treatment. If the teacher shows himself interested in the pupil's work, they will be encouraged to proceed. If he sympathizes with them in their petty troubles and trials, and supports them in every laudable ambition, he will, slowly perhaps, but not the less surely, win the way to their hearts. And once entrenched in their affections, he has acquired the power of moulding their lives in any direction he chooses. Of course, heredity, home influences and the child's surroundings outside of school may, in many cases, partially defeat the teacher's aim; but there are exceptions to every rule.

The greater part of the misery and evil in the world is due to ignorance. If education (physical, intellectual and moral) were compulsory and universal, the world, in a generation or two, would be revolutionized. If every child were thoroughly taught the interdependence of mind and body, and led to see that every time he broke a physical law, he injured and weakened his mind, and that he decreased the power of his body every time he erred mentally, that child would not be apt to grow up very careless about matters of right and wrong. A child on whose mind the teacher has impressed a thorough knowledge of the evil influences of alcohol and narcotics is pretty sure to grow up temperate. And so with other branches of learning. All are useful to fit the pupil for living a happy and successful life. If a pupil is brought to know a thing to be true, he will put that truth into practice. The difficulty lies in getting him to perceive the truth. In order that any subject may be properly taught, the teacher must strive to make his instruction interesting. If possible, every subject should be presented objectively—at least in its early and middle stages. When the reason is somewhat developed, objective illustration may be gradually dispensed with. But nothing can be taught unless the pupils' attention is secured. To get hold of that teacher must be able to put his instruction in as interesting a form as possible, and he must have those personal qualities that win their way to the children's affection and respect. Education cannot be given by force. Self-control and unlimited patience are the prime requisites for teaching.

New Anglican Dioceses.

MONTREAL, Sept. 18.—At the session of the Anglican Provincial Synod to-day a resolution was adopted favoring the formation of a new diocese in Ontario and another in Eastern Nova Scotia. Permission was also given to the Diocese of Algoma to take preliminary steps towards the formation of a Diocesan Synod, such a step being considered to be the best method securing the cooperation of the laity in church work.

Two Clergymen Agree.

Rev. P. C. Headley, 697 Huntington Ave., Boston, Mass.: "Although I have not given testimonials of so called 'Proprietary Medicines,' I can fully endorse the one written by my friend, the Rev. George M. Adams, D. D., of Auburndale, Massachusetts, which gave me confidence in the remedy before using it. Of all the preparations for dyspepsia troubles I have known K. D. C. is the best, and seems to be entirely safe for trial by anyone." Dr. Adams' statement is: "I recommended K. D. C. very strongly; in my case it has proved singularly efficient; when I could find nothing else to give relief, it was a prompt remedy. I should be unwilling to be without it."

The royal plate at Windsor is valued at over $10,000,000.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

"Several years ago, I caught a severe cold, attended with a terrible cough that allowed me no rest, either day or night. The doctors pronounced my case hopeless. A friend, learning of my trouble, sent me a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. By the time I had used the whole bottle, I was completely cured, and I believe it saved my life."—W. H. Marlborough and Vanderbilt.

The young duke of Marlborough is coming into fair waters after a shadowed boyhood. His mother, one of the beautiful daughters of Duke of Abercorn, and a sister of the Marchioness of Landsdowne, secured a divorce from his father, and he grew up with a divided parentage. His father, a very able man, but wild in life, married a few years ago Mrs. Hammersly, a wealthy New Yorker. Much of her money went to restore the Churchill estates. The relations between the young man and his stepmother have been of a cordial character, and it is more than likely that she was one of the main negotiators in the Marlborough-Vanderbilt alliance just announced.

The young Duke is the ninth of a title, created in 1702. The sudden rise of John Churchill and the fame and fortune he left behind him are one of the romances of history.

An almost equal romance of our own time is the rise of the Vanderbilt family, now to be allied to the British peerage. Sixty years ago the old Commodore Vanderbilt was a steamboat man, as the phrase goes, in the vicinity of New York. From that he got into a line of his own, and then a railroad, and then a network of railroads, and now his granddaughter is to bear one of the proudest names in England. And yet the old commodore can say to the old general, your son the ninth in descent is to wed my daughter, third from me. We both did the trick on our own merits, and our descendants reaped the benefit. Both men were remarkable for their force and shrewdness. Not many years ago the old commodore got off the train at London, and was married at railway lightning speed.

The young duke is 24 years of age, well educated, and moved the address in the Lords the other day, in reply to the Queen's Speech. Then he struck for America, and now, a fortnight or so after the match is announced.

Miss Consuela Vanderbilt has been, we are told, very carefully educated, and is, by her training, far more English than American. Her mother like her prospective husband's mother, secured a separation from Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt, who is now having a good time in Europe with a foreign lady.

We do not know whether our neighbors are proud of the match or not—whether they were proud of the capture of Miss Gould by a French count. At all events the Vanderbilts have now gone the Goulds one better. And speaking of the Goulds, it must not be forgotten that Mrs. George Gould, who is now a recognized leader in New York society, and has the entire of the best in England, was in her girlhood, not many years ago, a Toronto girl, without any fortune but her face and her inherent capacities.

By this marriage two American girls become Duchesses of Marlborough in succession, and twice in succession, New York fortunes fall into the laps of the Churchills. And thus some of the thriftiness of Sarah Jentill persists in her descendants.—Ex.
