DISPATCH. THE

A NOTABLE WEDDING

Joyful Words of Praise.

DR. THOMSON'S MED. Co., -Dear Sirs;

My wife having been a sufferer from indigestion and languor, was induced to try your Sarsaparilla. The result is miraculous. She was relieved by one bottle. Her appetite the best for years. As an alterative and tonic it has no superior. This statement, for the benefit of suffering humanity, we give freely.

In St. Thomas' church in New York city, Miss Consuela Vanderbilt will surrender her old name, and be hereafter known as the Duchess of Marlborough. Of course, this wedding is a great affair in society circles, and is the talk of society people where the Anglo-Saxon language is spoken.

In arranging the settlements preparatory to the Vanderbilt-Marlborough wedding, there were three family lawyers engaged. Col. William Jay represented Mrs. Vander-bilt, Chauncey M. Depew represented Mr. Vanderbilt, and R. Harding Milward acted for the Duke of Marlborough. It has been reported that Miss Vanderbilt's marriage portion would be $10,000,000. It was learned yesterday that, princely as was Mr. Vander-bilt's settlement upon his daughter, it has a condition attached to it, namely, that the income from the$10,000,000 shall be for the use of the future Duchess during her life time. At her death the principal goes to the issue of her marriage with the Duke.

It is understood that upon his side, the prospective bridegroom deeded to Miss Vanderbilt large estates in England, which have been in his family for years. While the intrinsic value of these estates may not be equal to Mr. Vanderbilt's gift to his daughter, yet they have heretofore always been considered too valuable to be permitted to pass out of the Marlborough family. Mr. Milward, who arranged all these matters for the Duke, is a resident of Birmingham. He was the counsellor of the father and grand-father of the present Duke.

White satin is the material used in Miss Vanderbilt's wedding dress, and it is so rich and heavy that it lives up to the good old expression of "being stiff enough to stand alone." The effect of the toilette at the first glance is that is just a mass of lace-rare, costly lace-for in place of the until-now fashionable untrimmed skirt, this 'one has five flounces of Point Angleterre lace, each ruffe being about eight inches deep. From waist to hem the entire front is covered with these ruffles arranged most artistically, in such a way as to show off the pattern and still allow for clever catching up here and there at the sides. The back of the skirt is Something very of plain satin laid in close neavy plaits, but there is no evidence of stiffness in the arrangement, and the only lining is a heavy silk one sprayed with small flowers: The high neck bodice has great full leg o' mutton sleeves reaching to the wrist, and these are on us and be steeves reaching to the wrist, and these are untrimmed, not even the usual cord being pleased. We sell placed around the cuff. Immense double ruffes of lace fall against the stiff revers of satin, while the soft vest of chiffon is covered CUTE Inflammatory Rheumatism is pro-A duced by an excess of uric acid in the blood. Paralysis is nearly a dead circulation produced by impure and impoverished blood. So-called neuralgia of the thigh is sciatic rheumatism; scrofulitic rheumatism is hereditary; syphilitic results from syphilis; gout is caused by high living; sluggish circulation affects the heart.

'THE KIND THAT CURES''

Thus the whole line of rheumatic diseases owe their being to an affected circulation of impure blood. No person can suffer a rheumatic pain that has a free and equal circulation of pure blood, and this accounts for Scott's Sarsaparilla curing the supposed incurable cases. It eradicates all rheumatic poisons and acids from the blood and equalizes the circulation.

ON COMMERCE.

Vivid Picture of the Man Who Lives for Money.

Rev. W. Hay Aitkin, a noted English missioner is holding a mission in Montreal. He is evidently making a deep impression on his hearers. One of his addresses on "commerce" contained the following:-

There were some men who frankly said that commerce existed for money-making. These men said that there was no use in trying to make them believe anything else. The object was to clutch all the money they could; to do everything to make a fortune; to take care that one's rival did not outstrip him in the race.

There was the medical man, there was the parson. He held each up to the view. He drew a picture of the first receiving his fee, which was perfectly proper, and the other receiving his salary which was perfectly laud-able. But the doctor did not work for his fee. He had to live. It was right that he should live in comfort. But if there was a single medical man who cared only for his fee and not primarly for the recovery of his patient, he was a disgrace to his profession, and he would give him a wide berth. The medical man gave of his skill, of his patience, of his mind. The parson was a man of like passions with themselves. He was liable to be overcome of evil. They must not expect him to be a paragon of virtue. But if the business men whom he addressed believed that the clergymen to whom they listened on Sunday was a mercenary creature who cared only for his salary, would they not turn from him in scorn?

Should commerce, then, be deemed dishonorable? Should it take a lower place? Should the commercial man hold that commerce was the agency of the devil? For it must be a diabolical agency if its object was the sole one of making money to the neglect of the moral and spiritual nature.

The Suez Canal was a commercial undertaking, yet it was the means of saving many and beneficial influence in other directions. If commercial men had not undertaken this great enterprise in a spirit of business sagacity it would never have been realized. It was a business speculation, yet it had accomplished great good.

With great clearness and force the speaker showed the lowering effect upon the moral and spiritual nature of the idea that commerce existed solely for the purpose of making money.

There was a man whose business it was to set the compasses upon certain ships in the Old Country. He was being brought out in a tug one day to one of the great liners upon which he had some work to do. On the way the cabin door was opened, and the owner of the ship came in. He expressed surprise to find the gentleman reading. 'Why,' said he, I never think of reading a book.' 'but,' said the gentleman, 'I like to keep up with the current thought, and when I have a chance, I read a little.' 'And I,' said the wealthy ship owner.'well recollect the time when I desired to cultivate my mind. I said to myself if I had five thousand poun ls I would retire and give myself up to the cultivation of my higher faculties. When I made the five thousand it seemed a small affair. I then said I would make ten thousand, and retire. Even the ten thousand, when realized, seemed small. Well, I said, when I make twenty thousand, I will surely retire, for that will give me at five per cent a thousand a year, and I can live on that, stop slaving, and give my mind a chance. But,' said the shipowner, sadly, when I made the the twenty thousand I did not stop. I went on. I became wealthy. My business absorbed me more and more. I never read from one year's end to the other The only thing I have time to read is the newspaper, and only the stock column in that.' The man was wealthy, but he had lost his intellectual nature. He was worth a quarter of a million, but the chance he had for improvement he had lost for ever. And this was the effect of allowing the spirit of money making to take possession of his nature. It became more and more difficult to rise to the higher apprehension of the true aim of life, which was educated up to the idea of God concerning man, and more and more easy to decline to the lower plane which was moral and spiritual loss. The nature became hard and mechanical; the view was contracted; the life was lived in vain, for it was productive of no good to come. one's fellows, and it missed the idea of God, Just Arrived for the Spring and Summer it missed the education which God designed should be imparted by commerce, which education, when the heart and mind were in-fluenced by it, realized that commerce was one of God's agencies by which he would have men rise to the full stature of perfect manhood. Raising his voice and speaking with intense force and energy, the speaker showed that the one thing needful was not necessarily religion, as that was commonly understood. It was not formalism. It was not decency. It was not going to church on Sundays. It was contact with God. It was Christ in the heart. It was the consciousness that he reigned in the spirit. It was not a past experience, even, but a present reality, that Christ was supreme in the mind and will and soul, giving the spiritual nature to think the thoughts of God, giving the soul to understand what is the supreme end of life; making it appreciate all the value and significance which God gave to human destiny. Then, indeed, loss would be gain; defeat, advantage. Then, nothing could overwhelm. But without this one thing needful, a man might clutch the wealth of the world and yet suffer irreparable loss; he might have gained his heart's desire, and yet be poor; he might have realized all upon which he had early set his soul, and have at the same time declined to that lower plane where the sordid, the mercenary, and the ignoble were supreme to the loss of the moral and spiritual experience which was the design of God that men should enjoy. Might God save all present from such spiritual bankruptcy.

the shoulders and falls down in a long serpentine line lying on the ground five yards. The "tail" as our English cousins call it, is adorn-ed with a band of embroidery about four inches wide, which took weeks to produce. So fine and delicate is every thread of silver, and so marvellous is the placing of the pearls, one fancies that fairy fingers alone executed this ornamentation bordering the entire train. It is lined with satin so that at every turn glistening ivory satin is visible, while all along the inside in place of the embroidered band is a narrow stiff ruff of plaited satin.

The fastening of this train made separate from the frock is alone a work of art, as it is caught at the sides with tiny rosettes, and underneath, not visible to the eye, are small ends of the ribbon, which tie it securely in place. It truly is an artistic creation, fit for a duchess, this costume of heavy satin and lace, and, although the court train is usually made of a corresponding material, such as brocade, one could not doubt the dressmaker's wisdom when they saw what excellent results can be obtained from white satin and point lace.

The underskirt, to be worn with this will be of a rich heavy silk, satin striped and finished with billowy masses of lace, so that at every move the daintily shod feet will peep out from the clouds of lace. Satin slippers, embroidered with pearls and silver and white silk stockings slightly traced with silver threads form the footgear. Rumor says that the heels will not be Louis Quinze, but very low ones, because of the height of the bride-elect, who is many inches taller than His Grace.

The bridesmaids' costumes are most simple but a chic effect will be given by the combination of colors. These garments are also fashioned of white satin, the skirts being perfectly plain, in direct contrast to the bridal one. The bodices are gathered at the throat and drawn down into pale blue sashes, which fasten in front towards the left side.
