DR. THOMSON'S MED. CO.,—Dear Sirs; My wife having been a sufferer from indigestion and languor, was induced to try your Sarsaparilla. The result is miraculous. She was relieved by one bottle. Her appetite the best for years. As an alternative and tonic it has no superior. This statement, for the benefit of suffering humanity, we give freely.

HIS FAITH IN THE WOMEN RECEIVES A SHOCK.

A Young Man Who Was Tipped Once Too Often and Has Been Sick Ever Since.—What Caused Salisbury's Back to Have a Hump.

I am a great believer in women's rights. Women put up with an awful lot from men, and have been putting up with them for many centuries, and I believe it's their turn to run things now. Therefore, I always sign all the petitions I can get hold of, in favor of woman suffrage. This sets me thinking about the derivation of the word "suffrage." I haven't a dictionary at hand—the only book of any description near me is a history of the prize fights, which the religious editor, has bound with a black cover, with large gold lettering "Pious Thoughts." When Sunday school superintendants and such come in to the office and find the religious editor deep in "Pious Thoughts," they say we must take the paper, he is such a good man, and then they ask to have their names put down, at 25% discount for cash. Well! I think "suffrage" must be derived from two United States words "suffer" and "age" and is peculiarly applicable to the situation, as women have suffered for many an age. I had just finished reading an article on "The Purity of Woman in our Political Life," by Rev. Dr. Eliza Louisa Higgins, and was all aglow with the beautiful prospects for politics in the near future when the sporting editor, with a fiendish grin on his face, handed in this item "TORONTO, Feb. 20.—Police Magistrate Denison at the police court this morning convicted Mrs. Mary Strong, the female pensionator, who voted in the name of 'Ann Ellis' at the recent municipal-elections in this city, and has fined her $200 and costs or sixty days in jail. She intends to appeal the case." Henceforth, I am a cynic, of the most cynical hue.

He thought quite a good deal of himself; that was evident, and it was also evident that he liked the appearance of the young lady who with a satchel in her hand was walking in the direction of the train. He smiled at her, and the corners of her mouth wiggled just a little bit. He approached her, doffing his hat elaborately, and asked if he might carry her satchel. She thanked him and gave him the luggage. When they arrived at Queen street station he helped her on the train and before he had time to inquire where she was going, she slipped a dime into his hand and with a very patronizing smile on her face, said "thanks my boy." His physician is now treating him for paresis.

It was rather a good joke that they are having on Salisbury, a friend of mine, who runs the English government, and has occasional jaw encounters with President Cleveland and his sub., one Olney. This lady, in question was told that Lord Salisbury was at the gold diggings in Bendigo, Australia, in 1852. On the place being pointed out to her recently, she is reported to have remarked: "Oh, the dear old man! I suppose it was the digging that made him so round shouldered."

That was a lucky girl that was born on Saturday last. She need never be afraid of telling her age, for she will not have another birthday until 2004, and after that she will have but one in four years. So, she may remain single as long as she likes, without any terror of being termed an ancient maiden, for if she lives till 2060, she can remark, with truth, "I am just approaching my 18th birthday."

Bad Blood Between Them. The ever-slaving farmer's wife, her delicate sister in the city, suffer more than they care to tell. The dark rings round the eyes, headaches, dizziness, palpitation or rheumatic twinges, betoken a run-down system. The blood is poor, and is a bar to enjoyment of life. Scott's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, strengthens and vitalizes the system, and speedily restores the bloom of health to the cheeks. It cures when all others fail.

An inventor has recently secured a patent for a contrivance to be used either as a cane or an electric light. The stick is hollow, the interior being filled nearly to the top with the necessary chemical solution. The knob is an incandescent bulb, with an ornamental and protective silver covering fitted with a spring. The poles of the battery extend into the hollow of the cane, but do not touch the acid. When a light is desired the cane is held knob downward, the acid attacks the zincs and the electricity generated lights the bulb. The amount of light given out is surprising, and lasts for two hours. There is no waste of material, as no electricity is generated except when the cane may be reloaded at but little cost.

Weak, Nervous Women.

One to whom a night's rest was unknown. Strength and good health restored.

I was subject to frequent attacks of nervousness that seemed to sap all my vitality and left me in a state of weakness and misery. I could not relish food and such a thing as a good night's rest was unknown. Incapable of any exertion and with an ever present tired and despondent feeling. Medicines that I took did not do any good; it was a case of gradually becoming weaker and weaker. Hearing of Scott's Sarsaparilla and its success with similar cases to mine, I used it, and from the first few doses began to get better, appetite returned, got natural and refreshing sleep. I grew stronger, in fact life seemed to be fanned into activity.—Lottie Graham, 174 Crawford Street, Toronto.

The purest zinc is obtained by the repeated electrolytic reduction of the metal in basic zinc sulphate solutions, from which it is obtained in a spongy state, and must be melted in vacuum. The metal so obtained is not absolutely pure, but contains at least 99.99 per cent. of zinc. With the electrolytic decomposition of zinc the secondary decomposition of water cannot be prevented. The formation of the spongy zinc takes place by the action of the oxygen.

The Art of Going to Bed.

Mr. Ernest Hart, D. C. L., is lecturing in London on the "Art of Living." He thinks that at the end of 5,000 years very few of us understand the elementary principles of comfort and health, and then treats of what seems the not too complicated subject of going to bed. The management of the bedroom and the art of going to bed would seem to be very simple matters, as to which some rational principles and comfortable and healthy customs might be expected to prevail. Let us see if this is so. Take the case of ordinary well-to-do Englishmen. He leaves in the winter a warm, well lighted, and perhaps sumptuously furnished room, and he ascends through a cold staircase to a room of which the temperature is not determined and is very apt to be below 60. In few of our homes are the passages and staircases warmed by a basement stove or base burner. If he is thoughtful and what is called self-indulgent he will have the room warmed by a coal fire or a gas stove. This is, however, by no means a universal rule, and is frequently reserved only for the heads of the establishment or for what are called delicate people. The room is rarely well or conveniently lighted, and the fittings commonly are centuries behind our modern knowledge. It is only here and there that hot and cold water are laid on, or that the lighting can be without effort shifted from the dressing table to the bed head, and controlled from a convenient place near the bed. The clothing is then removed, and the unhappy person then puts on something which is called a "nightgown," a sort of linen or cotton sack with sleeves, which leaves the lower limbs or feet more or less uncovered, and at once makes a man an uncomfortable and ridiculous object. It is the clothing of the primeval savage. If a ridiculous situation is needed for a farce it is commonly created by a night alarm at which the sleepers appear in the ridiculous guise at the bedroom door. The bed is a ridiculous contrivance, having the worst of all coverings, linen sheets, the foster mothers of rheumatism and the worst of all material for contact with skin. To counterbalance its defects and increase the miseries a heavy superabundant mass of blankets and quilts is imposed, and to prevent any comfortable or free movement of the limbs these are "tucked in" round the edges, consisting of a huge set of swaddling cloths such as no savage now employs even for children. The fire now is generally allowed to become extinct, if ever lighted, and those who have passed their day in warm rooms often spend the night in a chamber in which the temperature is not much above freezing point, and to mitigate which a complete covering of the body is required. The reasonable practice would require, first, that for the present hideous and ridiculous nightgown pajamas of various degrees of warmth or thinness should be provided. The present bedstead and bed clothing should be altogether discarded, and two light eiderdowns like the Indian resai or the Japanese futon should be substituted. Night socks should be worn of a texture suited to the season. Near the couch should be provided a book shelf with the favorite books. For myself, I select old and well-known favorites, Montaigne, Essays, Pepy's, Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy, a handy pocket Shakespeare, and Milton, with Virgil, Homer, Horace. Everybody will make his own selection of well-known and well-worn, and therefore not too exciting authors. The couch should be supplied with a convenient headrest, which falls forward at a touch. By the bed should be one lever which controls the gas, fire, and temperature, and one which controls the light, either a Bypass bed light or an electric light, as may be most convenient. The room should be kept at a temperature which never falls below 60, and in another part of it should be placed a long "back chair," with cushions to which, if the sleeper grows restless, he can easily transfer himself and repose in any angle. This is how to go to bed rationally, healthy, prepared for the emergencies of the night, whether of sleeplessness or household accident.

Boils and sores indicate impurities in the blood. Ayer's Sarsaparilla eradicates humors. Cold Storage. Major Clarke of London, England, spoke on cold storage, at a meeting, presided over by W. C. Pitfield at the Board of Trade rooms. The speaker said the maritime provinces had great advantage regarding cold storage, and if such facilities were provided an unlimited market for perishable goods would be opened, with cold storage facilities, poultry raising could be made a paying industry. On cattle and sheep raising he referred to New Zealand's wonderfully increased trade in frozen mutton, it having risen from one million to 115 millions of pounds since 1882. The maritime provinces were nearer the British markets and possibilities for this trade from here were so much better. He spoke at length on the advantages which would accrue from establishment of cold storage. Of course assistance from the government would be necessary.—St. John Gazette.

Georgia farmers are afraid of the peach crop. The recent warm weather swelled the buds on the trees and some are almost about to bloom. A frost would destroy the buds and ruin the prospects of a good crop.
