Dr. Thomson's Med. Co., -Dear Sirs;

My wife having been a sufferer from indigestion and languor, was induced to try your Sarsaparilla. The result is miraculous. She was relieved by one bottle. Her appetite the best for years. As an alterative and tonic it has no superior. This statement, for the benefit of suffering humanity, we give freely.

KING STREET,

f. L. ATHERTON,

AN AMERICAN'S OPINION

Of the Sentiment of Britons to His Countrymen. The following letter was contributed to the Washington Post by Mr. Irving C.

Rosse, who is a brother-in-law of Mr. Grenville James, United States consul at this post. Editor Post: Although a quiet looker on during the late ebullition of Jingoism through which we have just passed, I am surprised at the talk of many presumably intelligent people, and the utterances of some newspapers, regarding the alleged hatred of Englishmen for Americans. Late advices from foreign correspondents, who inform us of the cheering of the American flag in London music halls, and the sober second thought of many on this side of the water, seem, however, to have established a counter current. So I take it for granted that personal reasons, founded upon observation and experience, are now in order to show that such a feeling of hatred on the part of Englishmen does not

Let me say that, standing in the front rank of Americanism, I yield to none in patriotism, and that my worst enemy cannot accuse me of having even bought a substitute during the late civil war. Part of my educational life was spent in England, and since then having crossed the Atlantic many times and associated with Englishmen of all classes, ample opportunities warrant the impression that facts have made. Some people do not seem to realize that the revolutionary war is over, and that years ago "her Britannic Majesty's government acknowledged with profound regret" the depredations of the Alabama, which were healed by extending the right hand of fellowship containing more than a substantial money award. Yet the same people do not recall the display of mourning on some of the public buildings in London on the aunouncement of the death of Garfield. What public manifestation of the kind should we see in Washington tomorrow if the Queen or Prince of Wales met with a similar fate?

On witnessing the grand review of the troops after the bombardment of Alexandria a few years ago, I noticed the display of but two large flags. Hanging to a wire, stretched from the house-tops in the lower end of Regent street, was the British flag, the other beside it was the stars and stripes. Shortly after that I witnessed the procession of the Lord Mayor's show, a function something like inauguration day in Washington. The newlyelected official having passed amid the plaudits of the crowds, I soon heard a tremendous cheering from all sides, which, to my astonishment and patriotic pride, was caused by the appearance of the only foreign flag in the procession, the stars and stripes, having a special guard of honor made up of sergeants, with fixed bayonets. Our flag was cheered more than the Lord Mayor himself, and the London papers spoke of the incident in complimentary terms, the only exception noted being the Times, which said, "We doubt the propriety of the compliment."

Following this, on a more important occasion, the opening of the new law courts, the route from Westminster to Temple Bar was everywhere decorated with flags, the British ensign and our own being in loving embrace, and the entire front of a theater in the Strand, where an American actor had an engagement, was completely covered with the stars and

Only a short time ago I saw a play at the largest theater in London, the Alhambra, in which appeared the flags of various nations. The audience showed its feelings by hoots and hisses when the Russian and German flags came on the stage, but when the "The Star Spangled Banner" was presented the entire house rang with cheers and applause.

That Englishmen do not look upon us as foreigners is a matter of common observation. Visits to Flodden Fields, Tolferino, Magenta, and the battle-fields of my own country hav-Briton reproved me lately in Brussels with the remark that "every Englishman ought to see Waterloo" when the see Waterloo "when the see Waterloo" when the see Waterloo "when the see Waterloo" when the see Waterloo "when the see Waterloop "when the see see Waterloo," whereupon I said "But I am an American," to which he replied, "That makes no difference; it's all the same; you should go anyhow.'

I might cite to a tiresome extent as evidence of the general good feeling that prevails toward Americans numerous little incidents like these which by themselves are mere straws showing the direction of the wind, but taken in the aggregate have the weight and force of any multitude of particular. Not only is this feeling inculcated in English children by their school text books, but I am told it forms a part of commercial and even naval instruction. Lately, while conversing on this very subject with an English officer in Marseilles, he told me that officers of English ships are instructed to show more than ordinary courtesy to Americans in

I have been the recipient of much hospitality from Englishmen in various parts of the world, much of which, I believe, was prompted less by my personality than the fact of being an American, and nowhere in England have I ever met with anything like incivility. which is more than I can say of France or of Germany, the rudest country in the world. Indeed on one occasion of financial embarressment a generous English friend came unexpectedly to my rescue without hint or solicitation on my part, and at another time of serious reverse an Oxford man, with a large income, told me, without intimation or asking, that it was more than he spent, and generously offered a substantial sum as long as I wanted it, with the remark: "Pay it back when you are able, my dear boy, but if you don't I shall never ask you for it.'

To be sure, Englishmen are not noted for politeness in the French sense of the word, which consists pretty much in taking off the hat and putting it on again, but candor compels the admission, despite certain objectionthe bottom invariably actuated by sincere and kindly sentiments for Americans.

Rejected by Straight Line Mutual Companies.

But now insured in both.

"Should I die while I am in a position to pay my insurance premiums, my family will owe their support to Scott's Sarsaparilla. Two years ago I applied to two companies for insurance, $1000 in each. My face was a mass of pirrply blotches and my urine did not stand the test. One doctor in examining me aid I could not pass, but that my trouble was curable. He advised an alterative medicine, and I commenced taking Scott's Sarsaparilla. Both companies rejected me, but four months later, after I had taken five bottles of your remedy I am thankful to say both accepted me as a risk—one being a stock company, the other a mutual. The examiner who previously examined me, remarked "I never saw such a change in any man."

THE MUSINGS OF THE WICKED IMP,

HE WILL SACRIFICE PRIVATE LIFE FOR PUBLIC GOOD.

And Will Announce his Policy Next Week. Exposes a Little Scheme Pertalning to the Managing Editor.—Moralizes a Little.

I don't quite see what is going to happen to this country, unless I take my place at the head of affairs. And, yet, I am not hankering for the sweetness of public life. I find it more congenial to sit in my private cellar and meditate upon the sins and failings of my fellow mortals. It will not be an agreeable change to hurry out into the bustle and turmoil of politics, and have to mix up with the vulgar and the profane. I always had an aristocratic hauteur which makes me look down upon my fellow mortals with a contempt I cannot altogether disguise. I am of a very ancient lineage, and I cannot but feel contempt for those who can only trace their descent as far back as a vulgar sort of fellow who ran a farm and was named Adam. There was nothing much that I could see that was aristocratic about Adam, but it is something to be able to trace one's lineage to a period when there was no such thing as time-not even standard time. Certainly, we all have our weaknesses and if mine is a pride in the aristocratic traits which have distinguished my pious ancestors, it is a weakness and nothing more. However I must get to work and set matters straight. "The world is out of joint. Oh! cursed spite that ever I was born to set it right." Just now my hand is needed in the direction of dominion politics. I hereby give notice that I will issue my card to the electors of the dominion in the next DISPATCH. I am going to form a platform on which tories and grits, prohibitionists and free whiskiers may unite. There will be no opposition possible to the principles and practices I will put forward. So look out

'Tis a schemer the business manager is, sure, "so thare now." When business is a little slack so that he can get off for a few hours he goes to one of his friends and borrows a fifty dollar bill. There are really people in this world who know his peculiarities so slightly that it is possible for him to negotiate such a loan. With the large bill in his pocket he goes to the store of some of the numerous merchants to whom he is indebted and pulling out the aforesaid 50 in a careless sort of manner, as though it were the merest bagatelle, he throws it on the counter, and asks the merchant if there isn't a small account against him. The merchant looks at the bill; can't charge it because it being after banking hours all his cash is in the bank; the business manager knows 'tis after bank hours or he would not have tried the trick. The merchant smiles, tells the manager to call again, that its of no account anyhow. On this the manager returns the 50 to its lawful owner. He found a fellow who changed it one day, and he fainted dead away and was in bed for a week. After all, its not always so expensive to keep up a fellow's credit as one would think.

I have long been under the impression that people are apt to forget that while hard words break no bones, they are very apt to lacerate hearts, and I can in no way conceive of a person, male or female, calling themselves christians and at the same time allowing their tongues to wag, utterly without control, and to wag in an amount of gall that keeps them pickled in bitterness. Charity, we are told covers a multitude of sins, and without professing much authority to expound christianity, I would respectfully point out that charity and a bitter tongue cannot travel in the same boat. You may give half your income to the poor, and yet do it with such a motive that unless I am altogether mistaken, makes it a perfectly useless contribution to your soul's welfare. To keep the tongue clear of expressions of envy, hatred and malice, which three are generally combined in what we call gossip, is no easier than to subdue any other evil habit, but whoever has accomplished it, is quite beyond the control of-THE IMP.
