Curious Scene in a London Hotel Between Two Americans.

There was a remarkable scene at a Northumberland-avenue hotel on Thursday. It seems that a party of newly arrived Americans, most of them strangers to each other, were sitting at luncheon, and one of them was with an English friend who had called to see him.

The conversation between the two naturally drifted back to the war time, and the American, who had been a Federal, described some of his adventures, and how at one place the opposing soldiers used to work so near each other in the trenches that they were able to engage in conversation, and surreptitiously exchanged tobacco and tea—the Northerners having plenty of the latter and none of the former, while the Southerners were in exactly the opposite condition. But, he continued, the most cautious "swop" he ever made was a small packet of quinine for a pound of tobacco, to which the Confederate added a curiously carved wooden pipe. That pipe he had kept ever since, because he regarded it and the tobacco as having saved his life; for somehow or other his superior officer had come to know that he possessed a quantity of "the weed," and ordered him to report himself concerning it. Before he could regain his post a skirmish occurred, and the man who was in his very place was killed.

At this point a tall, sunburnt American, with white hair and beard, who had been listening to the other with considerable emotion, interrupted with "Excuse me, though I am a stranger to you, but didn't that Southerner tell you that the quinine was for his little daughter, who was down with fever?"

"Yes," said the other, "and didn't the Northerner say that his little girl was ill with fever, too, but he would share her medicine with the other little one, even without the tobacco?"

"Why, yes," cried the original narrator, "I believe he did, and that was me."

"And I was the Southerner," cried the other, and here is my daughter, whose life you helped to save, and here's one of my grandchildren with her."

The Englishman who was present says that there was then such a scene of hand-shaking, introductions and congratulations as must have made people at the other tables think the company must have been visitors from Bedlam. The Northerner had also a daughter with him, who is a widow, and the embrace of the two women who had never seen each other before, but whose early lives had so closely touched, was peculiarly affecting.

"And to think we should meet each other so far from home, and in England, too," exclaimed one.

"God bless England for it," say I, replied the other.—London Telegraph.

The hair, when not properly cared for, loses its lustre, becomes crisp, harsh, and dry, and falls out freely with every combing. To prevent this, the best dressing in the market is Ayer's Hair Vigor. It imparts that silky gloss so essential to perfect beauty.

About Squire Turner.

To the Editor of The Dispatch:

In your paper of May 20th, in an article on the old post road from Fredericton to Quebec and the military post at Presque Isle, there is an extract from an article written by Sir George Head describing his winter journey and his stop at the post. In this article the writer makes some very incorrect statements concerning Capt. William Turner who was then, and had been for many years, commandant at the post. I think it was unfortunate to say the least to refer to these remarks, as those who knew the facts, and could have replied, have passed away. I remember hearing my parents speak of this article, of its inaccuracies, of the indignation it excited not only among the friends of Squire Turner as he was generally called but nearly all who were mentioned. The writer's aim seems to have been to give an amusing rather than an accurate description of what he saw. He speaks of Mr. Turner's house. As commandant he lived in the officers quarters where he entertained all government officials who passed that way and chose to partake of hospitality, free of charge. Luxuries doubtless were few, and at times hardly procurable. As the soldiers were nearly all withdrawn after the place Squire Turner bought a farm on the west bank of the river and was building himself a home but did not live to finish it. While a prisoner of war at Charleston, S. C., he contracted a lung trouble of which he died, after a brief illness, sincerely mourned by all who knew him. He did not accumulate money, nor was he ambitious of honors but was everywhere respected as a christian gentleman. Governor Carleton entrusted him with some important missions, and was his personal friend as were Col. Allen, Major Hale, Col. Ketchum, Capt. Smith, Capt. Josiah Browne, who succeeded him J. P. But better than all he was the poor man's friend, they came to him in all their troubles and never came in vain, they honoured him while living and blessed his memory long after he was dust. I remember many years ago in far away Minn., an old settler stopped at my father's house, he proved to be from N. B., had been a drummer boy in the same regiment with Lieut. Turner. He said he was universally liked. He spoke almost with tears of his many kind acts. There is now living in Minn., a venerable lady, a granddaughter of Capt. Smith, who remembers hearing her father and others speak of Squire Turner, and always in the highest terms. That a man so worthy, so held in honor, should be remembered only by the seriocomic account given of him seems unfortunate and unjust.

Forests of The U. S.

The forest area of the United States, according to a recent official report, is 500,000,000 acres, not including Alaska, and the amount of timber available for the axe is placed at 2,300,000,000 feet, board measure. As the long procession of ciphers is somewhat bewildering, comprehension may be assisted by dividing the amount into lots of a million feet each, and bearing in mind that there are 2,300,000 of these lots. The southern states contain 700,000 millions, the northern states 500,000 millions, the Pacific states a million millions, and the Rocky Mountains 100,000 millions. The total amount cut is 40,000 million feet, of which 12,000 million are white pine, 5,000 millions spruce and fir, 4,000 millions hemlock, 4,000 millions long-leaf pine, 3,000 millions short-leaf and loblolly, 2,000 millions other conifers, 3,000 millions oak, and 7,000 millions other hardwood. The value of timber consumed annually is estimated at $1,044,000,000, of which $450,000,000 is ascribed to mill products, lumber, shingles, implements and furniture, stock, etc., $45,000,000 to railroad construction, and $450,000,000 to fuel and fencing. Those who live in cities or the neighborhood of them see coal and gas rapidly taking the place of wood for fuel, and wire fences substituted for wooden ones, yet we find that nearly one half in value of the wood consumed is for these two purposes. However, the displacement of wood not only in fencing and fuel, but in pavements, bridges and buildings, is still going on and is an important factor in the consideration of the future relation of demand to supply. The annual import of lumber is about $30,000,000 and the export a little less, not counting the export of $12,000,000 of manufactures of wood. It is estimated that the forest industries employ $562,000,000 capital and 348,000 men, and that 1,000,000 workers are employed directly and indirectly upon forest products.

BELONG TO CANADA.

Rich Gold Placer Mines Discovered to be Canadian Territory.
PORT TOWNSEND, Wash., Aug. 12.—The rich gold placer mines of Alaska have been transferred to Canadian territory, and miners are now paying the miners' tax to the British authorities. The territory in question is from three to eight miles in width, and embraces the rich placer claims on Glacier and Miller creeks, which, heretofore, were supposed to be in Alaska territory. These statements were made yesterday by Captain William Moore Canadian mail carrier between Victoria and Fort Cudahy, N. W. T. He has just returned from taking the first mail to the Yukon miners on British territory. Errors in the old survey were discovered last autumn, and during the winter Prof. Ogilbee, who now has charge of a corps of British engineers engaged in locating the boundary between the two countries, made the corrections, transferring a strip of territory from three to eight miles wide from Alaska to Canada. Over 200 miners were affected. These the Canadian mounted police immediately compelled to pay miners' taxes. Moore says there can be no doubt as to the correctness of the new survey. All of Miller and Glacier creeks and parts of several other streams rich in gold diggings are now claimed by the British authorities. It appears the miners conclude that the United States government did not care enough for the territory to establish a government fort, inasmuch as Prof. Ogilbee was permitted to locate such boundary lines as he chose without the assistance or presence of American officials, and no efforts were made to prevent the police from enforcing their regulations over that portion of Alaskan territory. Prof. Ogilbee told Moore he would remain at Fort Cudahy until the arrival of American surveyors, and would allow them to check his work if they so desired.
