

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER CURED.

Mrs. Lydia A. Fowler, Electric Street, Amherst, N.S., testifies to the good effects of the new specific for all heart and nerve troubles: "For some time past I have been troubled with a fluttering sensation in the region of my heart, followed by acute pains which gave me great distress and weakened me at times so that I could scarcely breathe. I was very much run down and felt nervous and irritable."

"I had taken a great many remedies without receiving any benefit, a friend induced me to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I had only been taking them a short time when I felt that they were doing me great good; so I continued their use and now feel all right. I can heartily recommend Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills for nervous prostration."

Mrs. Fowler adds: "My daughter, now fifteen years of age, was pale, weak and run down, and she also took Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills for some time, and is now strong, healthy and vigorous."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills cure palpitation, smothering sensation, dizzy and faint spells, nervousness, weakness, female troubles, etc. Price 50c. a box or three boxes for $1.25. Sold by all druggists. T. Milburn & Co., Toronto, Ont.

Mr. Melville Miller, Bensford, Ontario, says: "Laxa-Liver Pills made a new man of me. I was troubled with indigestion and pains in the small of my back, and after taking Laxa-Liver Pills for about three weeks they completely cured me." Price 25c., all druggists.

The Prince's Income.

Much has been said of late concerning the incomes of H. R. H. the Prince of Wales. It would be as well to state the exact figures.

Since 1863 the Prince has drawn £40,000 a year from the consolidated fund. The largest sources of the prince's income, however, are the revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall.

This property, which was first granted to the Black Prince, eldest son of Edward III., in 1337, on the understanding that in default of male issue the revenues should revert to the sovereign, was only worth in the time of William III. £9,000, sinking as low as £2,000 in the reign of Queen Anne. Under the wise management of the Prince Consort, the duchy so prospered that the accumulations of the Prince's minority amounted to £601,721, or according to Sir Charles Dilke, £742,000. Out of this sum £220,000 was laid out in the purchase of Sandringham, an estate of 8,079.

The income of the Duchy of Cornwall was last year £57,733 14s. 6d., in addition to £16,216, an annual sum paid by the country as compensation for the abolition of certain ancient dues on the tin coinage and in lieu of past groats and quit rents. The total revenue of the duchy is therefore £73,949 14s. 6d. The Prince is also colonel of the 10th Hussars, an honorary post worth £1,350 a year. On the Prince's marriage he was voted £23,455 to defray the expenses, and the Princess Alexandra £10,000 a year, to be increased to £30,000 in the event of her surviving him. When the Prince visited India in 1875 the nation gave him £142,000 towards his expenses, stipulating that £69,000 of this should be expended on presents. The Prince of Wales has undertaken by a recent act to provide for his children out of a sum of £36,000 a year, voted annually by parliament. Some years since he sold to the Queen, Birk Hall, an estate he inherited from his father, for, it is said, £120,000. The Prince lives rent free at Marlborough House, paying neither rent, rates nor taxes. The repairs, which are defrayed by the country, amounted last year to £2,000 13s. 6d. When he visits the Continent the expenses of the passage amounting as a rule, to £140, are defrayed by the country.

The Prince is patron of twenty-two livings, worth £7,636, and his total income is £174,293 a year. Last year the Duke of York drew as a naval captain, with full, half-pay, and allowances, £231 13s. 9d. The ex-Empress of Germany, Princess Royal of England, has a pension from this country of £8,000. On the occasion of her marriage £40,000 was voted as a dowry, and £5,000 for fitting up the Chapel Royal for the wedding, the expenses of which amounted to £20,000. Till last year the country has also defrayed the expenses of trips to this country, but the Ministry of the year 1884 declared that for the future all members of the Royal Family would defray their own expenses with the exception of the Queen and the Prince of Wales.

Love Not Laws.

The Westminster.

How are the stern inequalities of life to be changed? There they are, and they are stern. One man stands all day before the fierce furnace, or serves in the heat rotted factory, or, harder still, vainly "begs a brother of the earth to give him leave to toil." His "brother of the earth" is born of wealth, lives in luxurious ease, and never soils his hand with work, or knits his brow with straining thought. The one does not know the other, or care to know him. And yet, those men are brothers. Brothers! Strange, is it not? One woman carries on her jeweled fingers a princely fortune, and has about her a world of pleasure, and a wealth of admiring service. At her kitchen door one stormy night a woman from the alley stands, bent under a huge basket of laundered clothes, which took the strength from her hands and put the wasting in his eyes, and now she gets the week's few, hard earned coins with which the food and medicine of the week are to be paid, leaving nothing over against next week's need. And yet, the woman in the drawing room, sending out orders by her serving maid, and the alley woman at the door are sisters. Strange? Passing strange. Surely the inequalities of industrial and social life are hard and terrible.

To be sure there may be compensations. The inequalities may not be so great as they seem. The man with the scorching of the blast furnace on his face has a home where love is and sweet content and the "simple pleasures that always please." The memory of the other is haunted by an ugly fear, and his life is emptied of its worth. The woman from the alley in some mad moment may covet the other's lot, but, when she folds in her arms the child for whom she toiled, she knows a joy deeper and more satisfying than ever came to her sister on the avenue.

There may be real compensations, and yet the social order is out of joint. The abundance in the lot of one belong in part at least to the other the conditions of whose life are hard and cruel and unyielding.

How are these inequalities to be changed? By law? Never. Laws may divide the abundance of the things and give to the poor the bread of the rich. But not thus will the social wrong be righted. Love must do it; love working it may be through laws; but love not laws. Not legal compulsion but the constraint of brotherhood. The man of wealth must in some way come into touch with the hand wrought toiler. The woman with the soft diamond fingers must know personally and helpfully the woman with the laundry basket on her hip. Impossible? It is not impossible. It has been done. It is being done every day else this world were a very hell. It can be done by whosoever taketh Christ's standard of values learneth of Him the way to the heart and holdeth life its gifts and its graces as a stewardship from Him to be exercised in His spirit and at the last accounted for before His judgment seat.

Boy Behind.

The cry of the street urchin to the driver of a wagon notifying him that a boy is "stealing a ride" is typical of the envy, malice and uncharitableness exhibited by a great many grown people. The boy who sounds the warning would gladly take the ride if he could get the chance. He does not regard stealing a ride as a moral offence or shout to the driver in the interest of law and order; his sole purpose is to get the other boy into trouble or deprive him of his pleasure. His conduct has not even the doubtful merit of being dictated by a selfish desire for his own benefit. He gains nothing by having the other boy driver from his perch except the gratification of his malice. Nothing could be meaner or more contemptible than such conduct.

Yet there are a great many grown people of much apparent respectability who are ready to cry "boy behind" whenever they see one of their fellows enjoying something beyond their own reach.

Envy appears to be a very common failing of humanity. It is manifested in various ways. Some people are rendered unhappy by witnessing the prosperity of their neighbors, but do nothing to obstruct them. Others content themselves with malicious remarks intended to depreciate the reputation of those whom they envy, and some others behave like the street urchin and actively interfere to prevent the advancements of their fellows. It is a somewhat curious observation also, that this envy is more likely to be aroused by a friend or acquaintance than by a stranger. The man of envious disposition takes little notice of honors paid to one with whom he has had no acquaintance, but if his neighbor is nominated for office his spleen is aroused and he inquires why this honor should be paid to a man who has done nothing to deserve it.

What may be called the general envy of excellence is a matter of common observation. The man who has become eminent in the community for his learning, his charitableness, his religious zeal, his high morality, although he may be the subject of general praise, is set up as a mark to be shot at by the envious, and if he should fall—as some men who have enjoyed good reputations will fall—the envious gloat over his misfortune.

"What a wretched and apostate state is this," says Addison. To be offended with excellence and to hate a man because we approve him! The condition of the envious man is the most emphatically miserable; he is not only incapable of rejoicing in another's merit or success, but lives in a world wherein all mankind are in a plot against his quiet, studying their own happiness and advantage."

The best among us suffer more or less from envy, but we can learn to put it away as something unworthy. It sometimes manifests itself in a mere passing thought. One hears of the good fortune of a friend and the thought flashes through his mind: "Why could it not have come to me?" But if he is a good man, the thought makes no impression, the envious suggestion get no encouragement. We should cultivate a kindly and charitable disposition to the end that we may overcome all tendency to envy or malice.

The youth who cries out "boy behind" for the discomfort of his playmate is father of the man who renders himself and others unhappy by his malicious envy.

Eye Strain Illness.

Only those who have been relieved by the use of glasses understand what bearing the condition of the eyes has on the general health. There are children today sick because of eye strain. Their illness may be attributed to other causes, and they will go on being sick until the True Cause be discovered by the exercise of good common sense on the part of the parents. If your child complains of the eyes, see what the trouble is—I can tell you—it won't cost you anything, so there's no excuse for negligence.

A Pretty Advertisement.

One of the prettiest things in an advertisement is the picture recently put out by the Coleman's mustard people. It is a copy of an oil painting, of the Queen's Jubilee in 1897, and is a large and really beautiful picture. John Graham has a few of these pictures in his store. They are certainly a credit to the artistic taste of the proprietors of Coleman's mustard.
