CATCHING A COLONEL.

Sir James Macleod suggested that ocular inspection would be the quickest and most satisfactory method-ocular inspection by the senior efficers of the mess. Their words would probably be sufficient for both parties.

The colonel demurred a little to this proposition. It seemed to him totally subversive of discipline. He was quite sure that the commander-in-chief would not approve of it, No other possible way of settling the question occurred to him, however, and, now that he had got so far, he was determined to win that hundred pounds at all hazards, and give the young Scotch jackanapes his much-need-

Candles were accordingly sent for at once, and a dead silence ensued. Every man looked at the other as if inquiring what would be the next act in this singular drama. Even young Fanshawe forgot to laugh. The colonel breathed heavily and his eyes glared at his adversary, who still retained his unmoved demeanor.

At last the lights came. Armed each with a candlestick, the major, the captains, and the senior subaltern in turn examined the gaping orifice which the colonel revealed to their gaze, during which inspection young Fanshawe threw himself headlong on to a sofa and kicked like a person in mortal agany; while two other subalterns expressed their feelings in a bear-fight behind the colone's unconscious head.

The verdict of the judges was unanimous. They declared that the roof of the colonel's mouth was red and not black.

"Decidedly red," said the senior captain, with a curious chuckle that seemed fraught with a world of meaning. "Not a trace of

"Not black?" cried Sir James Macleod in tones of amazement. "Are you sure?"

"Quite sure," replied the major, judicially. "Pon honor!" remarked the others in chor-

"Well, gentlemen you have surprised me," said Macleod, glancing from one to the other as if he could scarcely believe his ears. "Of course I believe you-but-if the colonel will permit-I should like to look just to convince my own eyes.

"Look away, me boy," chuckled the colonel, hoarsely. He was convulsed with delight at his complete triumph. "You'll have to pay for your peep.

"Well, then, please open your mouth a little wider, colonel; and will one of you hold little wider, colonel will be a second will be me, but I can't see. You must really let me open your mouth a little wider."

With these words he actually laid one sacrilegious hand on the colonel's nose and the other on the colonel's chin, and pressed them gently in opposite directions.

There was not a man, among all the reck-less crew that stood around, but held his breath in anticipation of a terrible explosion. The colonel did not rise and annihilate the audacious Scotchman. He bore this insult

The indignity was, however, of the very shortest duration, for Macleod was satisfied with the briefest glance.
"I have lost," he said quite cheerfully.

And I owe you an apology, colonel. Luckily, I have the notes about me." He produced his pocketbook, extracted two fifty-pound notes, from it, and handed them to the colonel. The latter took them with the most portentious gravity. He was clearly puzzled and uncertain as to the right course of action. He puckered up his face in the most curious wrinkles. Then he rubbed his nose reflect-

The humorous side of the question, how-ever, presented itself very forcibly to him, and he broke into a broad grin.

"Well,' he said with a loud roar of laughter, "you are a damned impudent young ras-cal. But I didn't think that a Scotchman and his money were so easily parted."

And amid sympathetic roars from the en tire mess, who thought the whole thing a capital joke all round, the colonel's indignation melted into intense enjoyment of his own success. The only person who was unsettled in his mind was young Fanshawe, who couldn't understand why Macleod should have risked a hundred pounds in so foolish a way.

"I don't think much of that Scotch chap you sent us." wrote the colonel a few days later, to his old schoolfellow, Captain Fletcher, of the blues. "Too much brag; too little bottom. He'll never set the Thames on fire. Only a few nights ago he actually bet me a hundred pounds to twenty that I had a black roof to my mouth—cheeky young devil! Well, I took the bet, just to give him a lesson. You ought to have seen his face when he lost. Really, I coulden't help roaring with laughter to see how confident he had been and how sold he was You must be a dull lot in the Blues if he always wins from you. Anyhow, I have broken the record." Captain Fletcher wrote by return of post to his old school-fellow, Col. Dominick Pow-

"Confound you! Didn't I caution you most pointedly not to bet with him? Could you not have known that there must be some deviltry on, or a man would not throw away his money in such preposterous fashion? Be-fore he left us, Macleod laid me one hundred pounds to a thousand that he would pull your ness in the presence of the mess before he had been a week in the regiment, and without being court-martialled or even being placed under arrest for it, and I have just received a round-robin, signed by your mess, declaring that he has won the bet."

Thousands of Mothers.

Try It for Your Boys and Girls.

WELLS & RICHARDSON Co.,

DEAR SIRS: -- I think it a duty to write you for the benefit of all who have delicate children, and to make known what Paine's Celery Compound has done for my child. I have tried many medicines, and have had her under allopathic and homoepathic treatment with but little benefit. Almost in despair, and as a last resort, I tried Paine's Celery Compound, and after using three bottles she is now perfectly well and strong. I have also used your medicine myself for complaints arising from overwork and loss of rest, and am greatly benefitted thereby. I would strongly urge all who are in any way afflicted to do as I have done, "try Paine's Celery Compound," and be convinced of its before the council." Having made the wonderful curing power.

Yours gratefully, MRS. A. R. STINCHCOMBE, William St., London, Ont.

The county councillors need not be too sensitive on the matter of the time they expend in their deliberations. They are a parliament in the true sense of the word, for parliament simply means a public gathering for the discussion of public affairs. On the whole the county councils discuss matters of nearly as great importance, as the matters that come up for debate at the legislature, and the county councils are made up of better men, generally, than the legislature. Five or six days in the course of the year, devoted to the discussion of the affairs of a fine county like Carleton, should not be regarded as altogether unreasonable. By means of the meetings of the council, the various parts of the county come in contact. For instance, it was not a waste of time to discuss the advisability of sending a representative of this county to England in the interests of our producers. You will find something will come of this motion, when you get a practical shipper like Coun. C. E. Gallagher of Kent, admitting that if a competent man should go across to England and return with valuable information, it would be a grand thing for shipper and farmer alike, the matter is surely worth consideration. Such a man would be, practically, a commercial traveller representing this county, in the great market of the world. All business now is done by the traveller, and the practical farmer and experienced man whom this county should send, would bear the same relation to the farmers and shippers of the county, that a good travelling salesman does to the firm by which he is employed. Give the county council all the rope it wants for full discussion, and they earn their $2.00 a day, all right.

Says the Bob. Ind. which hits the nail squarely on the head, as a general thing:-"Several persons in Ontario are flattering themselves that they are cousins, aunts, or something to Capt. Dewey, who had a naval picnic at Manilla. Just what difference Dewey's work can make to his Ontario cousins, is a trifle difficult to discover. If their great grand fathers had been hanged for sheep stealing, they would not have considered it any slur upon their own character for honesty. Then what rot it is for people to stick their noses into the clouds and look with disdain upon common white trash, simply because through the accident of birth, and often a risky accident at that, they can claim relationship to a Dewey, or some other fellow with a handle to his name. In this democratic country the value of every tub, is its measure of usefulness. A cracked tub is no use, no matter who was the great grand cousin of the man who made it.'

Their is a peculiar disposition among councillors both in the town and county councils to make motions "just to bring the matter motion and elicited a long discussion, the mover is quite as apt as not to withdraw his resolution. As far as I am able to judge, their is no law or parliamentary custom to prohibit such a course, but its sweet reasonableness may well be questioned. As a general thing a resolution is submitted by a member, as his view on a particular question. Councils are not debating clubs, and if no member present is enough in favor of some proposition to speak in favor of it, and to try and get others to support it, it is not, manifestly, his duty to set up a motion, which he has no intention will carry, in order that exhaust air may be thereby got rid of.

Who talks now of jealousy between town and county? I have been accused of saying things that tend to breed this awful jealousy. I have been advised that the resident out of town is a super-sensitive individual who must be treated like a child, or he will do something awful to the town. And, now, I see that this is all plaguey nonsense. There is no trouble between the townsmen and country land owners. And a Woodstocker need not feel that he is walking on eggs, when he discusses municipal matters, with an out of town citizen. Probably the countryman sees nothing particularly in the condition of the ordinary Woodstocker to make him grin
