

The three great vital factors of this body of ours are the heart, the nerves and the blood. It is because of the triple power possessed by Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills of making weak, irregular beating hearts strong and steady, toning up run down, shattered, nervous systems and supplying those elements necessary to make thin, watery blood rich and red, that so many wonderful cures have been accredited to this remedy.

Here is the case of Mrs. R. J. Arnold, Woodstock, N.B., who says: "I was troubled for some time with nervous prostration and general weakness, feeling irritable, debilitated and sleepless nearly all the time. My entire system became run down. As soon as I began taking Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, I realized that they had a calming, soothing influence upon the nerves. Every dose seemed to help the cure. They restored my sleep, strengthened my nerves and gave tone to my entire system. I think them wonderful."

Forest Fires and Forest Growth.

The study of the part played by fire in modifying the composition and mode of life of forests is one of the newest branches of forestry. That is has not received the attention it deserves is the opinion of Gifford Pinchot, Forester of the United States Department of Agriculture, who writes an interesting article on the subject in The National Geographical Magazine Washington, October. Mr. Pinchot says that the records of past fires, written in the forest now on the ground are often decipherable for more than a hundred years back, and in many cases for more than twice that length of time. The forests which the first white explorers saw on this continent were themselves the successors of others, which, through thousand of years, were burned down at intervals which we can no longer trace. There is but little of all the vast forest area of this country which does not bear, either in actual scars and charcoal or in the manner and composition of its growth, the marks of fire. The records of the Division of Forestry indicate a direct loss to the nation of $20,000,000 a year due to forest fires, and to this must be added a vast direct loss that is unrecorded, and the indirect loss due to destruction of water supply, etc. Mr. Pinchot believes that, taking into account soil deterioration and destruction of the young growth, the whole loss amounts to more than $50,000,000 annually. He goes on to say:—

"Fires determining the presence or absence of forest in a given region far more generally than is often supposed. A very large part of the prairie region of the United States is treeless probably because of fire. Such evidence as we have point strongly in this direction, and in addition the behavior of the border forest lands along the eastern edge of the prairies powerfully confirms this view. Where such forest lands have been protected from fire, as they have very largely through the progress of settlement, young trees have usually sprung up in great numbers under or between the scattered veterans which had survived the fires, and a dense and vigorous young growth stands ready to replace by a heavy forest the open park-like condition which the fire had created and maintained. The well-known 'oak openings' furnish an excellent case in point. In a similar way and for similar reasons trees are spreading from the borders of streams in the prairies to the grass lands near by. Such indications as these, joined to the occasional discovery of evidences of former tree growth out on the prairie, where trees no longer grow, go far to prove that trees once grew and may grow again much beyond the limits they occupied when the white men first entered the country. That fire was a restraining cause admits of no doubt whatever, and that it was the principal cause over vast areas is altogether probable."

Speaking of the various qualities of resistance of fire possessed by different trees, Mr. Pinchot says:—"These qualities are of two chief kinds; one, adapted to secure the safety of the individual tree directly through its own powers of defence, the other, to assure the continuance of the species, with little regard for the single tree. An example of the first kind is the Western larch, whose enormously thick bark is almost fireproof, and so good a non-conductor that it protects the living tissue beneath it even against fires hot enough to scorch the trunk fifty or seventy-five feet above the ground. It is to this quality of their bark, as well as to their marvellous vitality, that the big trees of California owe their power to reach an age of three thousand or four thousand years."

The long-leaf pine has a different mode of protection:—"During the first four or five years the long-leaf sending reaches a height of but four or five inches above the ground. It has generally been erroneously assumed that this slow growth made it susceptible to injury from fire; but while the stem during these early years makes little progress, the long needles shoot up and bend over in a green cascade which falls to the ground in a circle about the seeding. Not only does this barrier of green needles itself burn only with difficulty, but it shades out the grass around the young stem, and so prepares a double fire-resisting shield about the vitals of the young trees."

The second method of protection, which sacrifices the individual, but insures the safety of the species, Mr. Pinchot tells us, is exemplified in the lodgepole pine, which, though it succumbs readily to fire, is gaining ground in the Rocky Mountains, even replacing thick-barked species like the red fir. How it accomplishes this is thus told by Mr. Pinchot:—

The device to which this curious result is due is similar to that of Pinus attenuata, to which John Muir long since called attention. It consists in the hoarding for several years of the ripe seeds in the cones. Fire rarely burns down the lodgepole pine, but in nearly every case simply kills the standing tree and leaves it to be blown down years after, when decay shall have weakened the roots. In the meantime the hoarded winged seeds are set free by the opening of the cones, are distributed and germinate, and the new crop contains a larger proportion of lodgepole than the old. By the repetition of this process great stretches of burned land are finally covered with a pure, ever-aged growth where formerly the forest was composed of other and usually much more valuable species."

Another instance of distribution controlled by fire is that of the red fir in the States of Oregon and Washington, where young seedlings are always found on burned-over ground and never under the forest cover. Says Mr. Pinchot:—

"In a word, the distribution of the red fir in western Washington, where it is by all odds the most valuable commercial tree, is governed, first of all, as far as we know at present, by fire. Had fires been kept out of these forests in the last thousand years the fir which gives them their distinctive character would not be in existence, but would be replaced in all probability by the hemlock, which fills even the densest of the Puget Sound forests with its innumerable seedlings. I hasten to add that these facts do not imply any desirability in the fires which are now devastating the west."

BEYOND COMPARISON.

There is Nothing in the World to Compare in Curative Value with Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets for Dyspepsia.

Vegetable pepsin is the most valuable constituent in the pineapple. Barring the digestive juices of the human system, no other article or product has the power to digest all kinds of food, except vegetable pepsin. One's general health would be amazingly improved if he could eat a pineapple a day, but hardly one person in a thousand could do so because of the trouble and expense of getting them when out of season.

Dr. Von Stan's Pineapple Tablets have all the virtues of the ripe fruit—they are largely made up of the precious pineapple acid. They cure dyspepsia and all stomach troubles. Box of 60 Tablets, 35 cents. For sale by Garden Bros.

Experimenting With Frozen Pork.

The United States Consul-General at Frankfurt, in a report to his Government, says: "At Mainz, Germany, experiments have just been made with frozen Russian pork by the several regiments of infantry stationed there. About a ton of this pork, which had arrived in a solidly frozen state, was used for dinner, but the result of the experiments, according to the reports published in German papers, was not satisfactory. The meat, it is said, emitted an unpleasant smell while being boiled, and after being boiled for fifteen minutes became like a hard paste. The taste also left much to be desired."

THE HEART WAILS

Of Thousands Have Been Turned Into the Joy Songs of the Cured by the almost Magic medicine, Dr. Agnew's cure for the Heart—It Relieves in Thirty Minutes.

Mrs. John Fitzpatrick, of Gananogue, was for five years a great sufferer from heart disease—spent some time under experts in Kingston hospital without getting any benefit and was pronounced incurable. She commenced taking Dr. Agnew's Cure for the heart, and when she had taken three bottles all dropsical tendencies, palpitation and pain left her and she has had no return of it, and ascribes her cure to this greatest of heart remedies. Her Handy Money Stocking-1

"Yes, you are right," said the conductor of a Main car, viciously ringing up a fare. "Some people do carry money in queer places. Now, that Chinaman in there kept me waiting over two blocks while he untied a Gordian knot in his queue, where he had his cash. Some people keep me waiting five blocks or more while they fish around for their money."

"It must be very aggravating when you are in a rush."

"Oh! it's tough, but a man has his fun out of it, just the same. Yesterday I was going North on Main Street, when, at the corner of Adams, two women got on the car. I waited a minute or so, and then went in for the fares. The women looked sort of dashed, and then one of them began to fumble in her purse. Empty. Then her companion made a dive at the bottom of her skirts, and I prepared to blush.

"Well, sir, it beat all; that woman deliberately unlaced her shoe and took it off, and through a hole in her stocking fished out a dime."—Memphis Scimitar.
