

Tired Housekeepers.

Disordered Kidneys bring them a multitude of pains and aches.

How often women give out before the day's work is fairly begun and sink into a chair utterly worn out.

But the housework must be done even though the back does ache, and the head feels ready to burst.

These women can't understand why they are never strong, why the night does not bring rest, why they are always tired, have no appetite and seem to be pains and aches all over.

As a rule the real cause of the trouble is the last one thought of.

It all comes from the kidneys. These delicate little filters of the blood get out of order, and as a result the uric acid and other poisons that they ought to carry off are sent back into the system.

There's no use trying to get relief until the kidneys are restored to health.

The easiest, safest, quickest way to accomplish this is to take Doan's Kidney Pills—nature's own remedy for all kidney diseases and derangements.

Mrs. Martha S. Frost, Little River, Digby Co., N.S., recently wrote as follows: "I have much pleasure in stating that Doan's Kidney Pills have wonderfully improved my health. I had been suffering with lame back for a number of years and at the time I began taking Doan's Pills I was almost unable to do any housework."

"I have used three boxes and must say they have taken the pain out of my back and restored my strength. I don't think there is any other medicine equal to Doan's Kidney Pills for kidney troubles."

New Stories of "B. P."

Here is the story of two pretty adventures which Baden-Powell had in Matabeleland: Having emptied his Colt's repeater, he threw it carefully under a peculiar tree, so that he might find it when business was done; then he went to work with his revolver. As he rode forward he came upon an open stretch of ground, and the first object that struck his attention was a well-knit Kaffir on one knee covering his body with a Martini-Henry. The distance was about eight yards, and Baden-Powell telling the story, says that he felt so indignant at the fellow's rudeness that he rode at him as hard as he could gallop, calling him every name under the sun. But the Kaffir was not to be moved even by the best bred abuse, and he remained kneeling with the rifle pointed at B.P., until the horseman, with locked jaws and gleaming eyes (those who know him will understand), was only ten yards off. Then he fired, and B.P. says he felt relieved "when I realized he had clean missed me." That nigger was shot immediately afterwards by one of Baden-Powell's men, who was riding to his help from behind.

The other close shave will make the nervous turn cold to think of it. B.P. had ridden to the help of two men kept at bay by a nigger under a tree, and when the nigger had been killed, he was standing for a moment under the tree, when something moving above him made him look up. It was a gun-barrel, taking aim at him. The man behind the tree, standing on the branch, was so jammed against the trunk of the tree as took part of it, and while B.P. was making a note of this fact for his next lecture on scouting, bang went the gun, and the ground in front of his toes was as if a small earthquake had struck it. That nigger's knobkerrie and photograph are now in the Baden-Powell museum—a museum which began with butterflies and birds' eggs, and now includes mementos of nearly every tribe and animal on the face of the earth.

The first time I met Baden-Powell (writes a military correspondent) was in an Indian drawing room. As I came into the room, a man who had evidently been amusing the lady of the house very much, was just shaking hands before going, and I noticed that his eyes twinkled with humor. "That is Baden-Powell," said the lady when he was gone, and in reply to an "Oh!" on my part, which evidently did not convey very much knowledge of the hero, I was given a catalogue of his accomplishments. "He won the Kadir Cup, he draws pig-sticking pictures just as well as Hobday, he stage-manages as firmly as Riddell, acts as cleverly as Liddell, writes songs as neatly as Nev. Chamberlain and rides over fences as boldly as Lord Bill." This to a Londoner might not convey much, but to an Anglo-Indian it implied the highest praise that could be given to any man. To win the Kadir Cup in India is equivalent to riding the winner of the Grand Military or Grand National in England. For several reasons, which it is not necessary to enter into, military steeplechasing has not flourished in India and pig-sticking has taken its place. To win the Kadir Cup or the Granges Cup is the ambition of every sporting subaltern in the East, and to have done so is to have achieved fame.

It is difficult to write anything new about "the hero of the Empire," but, as I had the good luck to serve under him in Rhodesia (writes another military friend), a few authentic reminiscences (as distinguished from those concocted in Fleet street) may be of interest. Apart from his genius as a commander, and his truly phenomenal appetite for hard work, the thing about B.P. that I remember with the greatest distinctness was a peculiar pair of riding breeches he occasionally used to wear. They were like those affected by stage innkeepers or Tyrolean hunters. The upper part was of dark velvet or velvet cord, to which were laced long, drab colored, skin-tight stockings or gaiters, extending from the middle of the thigh to the ankle, and ornamented with numerous round pearly buttons. I often wondered how "B.P." got in and out of these complicated breeches, and once, seeing him preparing for a tub in the collapsible bath, which accompanied him everywhere, I lay in wait and watched, but just at the critical moment I was called away and the opportunity was lost.

Another thing that impressed me about "B.P." was that he rarely, if ever, used profane language. His commands, whilst always firmly given and implicitly obeyed were unaccompanied by that concomitant of oaths without which so many commanders seem to find it impossible to express themselves.

B.P. planned most of the attacks, and frequently led in person. His movements were always mysterious. We would march off in the dead of night, with never a sign of B.P., but the dawn would find him riding at the head of the column as fresh as paint, and apparently just come out of a bandbox. After the fight he would disappear again, and we would see nothing of him till the next fight was on. He never seemed to be in a hurry, or to be overworked, or to have a care on his mind, and he never by any chance talked about himself.

Value of Dead Celebrities.

Statisticians tell us that the hairs of our head are numbered, and they further state that the average head of fair hair consists of 143,000, of dark hair 105,000 and of red 30,000; therefore, if we allow our celebrity 100,000 hairs, or, say, 500 (relic trade) locks, we shall have some data upon which to estimate the value of his hirsute adornment, says Cornhill. A lock of Edward IV.'s hair last July fetched £8 8s.; in 1896 some tresses of Marie Antoinette's hair were, brutal as it sounds, knocked down for £36; two locks of Napoleon's hair, one of which is in the possession of Lord Sheffield, sold recently for £30 (the price included a letter showing that it was a well-authenticated memorial) and £5, respectively, while a watch and a lock of Sir Walter Scott's hair realized £29 5s. If we value our celebrities' locks at £8 apiece, or £4000 for the head of hair, no one with the above figures to guide him can accuse us of exaggeration. A "part" of the beard of George III. last August only realized 35s., but then George was never really popular among relic hunters, and we have no doubt that our celebrity would command better prices. As a "part" is so vague a measure, and as the statistician, as far as we know, has so far failed to number the hairs of our beards, we feel obliged to estimate the value of the celebrity's beard and mustache at the nominal figure of £250—a very alarming sacrifice, we feel sure.

A Good Cure.

THE GRODER DYSPESIA CO.'S L.T.D.
ST. JOHN, N. B.

GENTLEMEN,—For over one year I suffered with what the four doctors I consulted in N. H., called dyspepsia. For hours at a time every day I suffered the most excruciating pains. The cramps would double me up so that I would have to groan. I would vomit up everything I ate for days at a time. I was terribly wasted and so weak that I could scarcely raise a teacup to my mouth. Nothing I could get would do me any permanent good. Finally a friend persuaded me to try Groder's Botanic Dyspepsia Syrup. I took four bottles and am now able to do a good day's work. It is six weeks since I finished the last bottle. I eat anything I ever was fond of and suffer no inconvenience. I send you this voluntary testimonial, hoping that you may use it and that some one who reads it may be benefitted by the use of Groder's Botanic Dyspepsia Syrup as I have been.

Yours truly,

RICHARD JACKSON,
Hartland, N. B., Aug. 30th, 1899.

Philadelphia Most American.

Ainslee's Magazine: Foreigners in the United States cling to the great cities, though in none of them do they outnumber the natives. In New York and some other of the larger cities the foreigners and those of foreign parents unquestionably outnumber those of American parents of two generations' standing. Here is a table of natives and foreigners in some of the cities in 1890:

City.	Native.	Foreign.
New York.....	875,358	639,945
Chicago.....	649,184	450,666
Philadelphia.....	777,484	269,480
Brooklyn.....	544,643	261,700
St. Louis.....	336,894	114,876
Boston.....	290,305	158,172
Baltimore.....	365,436	69,003
San Francisco.....	172,176	126,812
Cincinnati.....	225,500	71,408

This shows that of the cities of the first class Philadelphia is the most American, while New York and Chicago run a race with each other as to which is the most foreign.

Cost of the War.

It is by no means beyond the bounds of practical politics to estimate the amount that can be found by "the late" Republics towards the indemnity at £4,000,000 per annum, and this should dispel all fear as to the repayment of the expenditure forces upon us. The cost of the war, at present reckoned at £63,000,000 need therefore cause no immediate apprehension to the British taxpayer any even if the indemnity be raised to £80,000,000 to cover compensation and eventualities, the inhabitants of new colonies could pay that sum and still be in a far better position than that which they had to endure previously to last October.—Pall Mall Gaz. etc.

Safeguard Against Conscription.

The siege (of Mafeking) will, we hope, compel soldiers to reconsider their judgment as to what half trained men can do. That judgment is of the last importance to us, for we shall not resort to the conscription, of which, indeed, every incident of the war tends to reduce the necessity. What need of the dreaded life in barracks for the defence of England when men who never passed through that mill can fight behind hillocks like the Boer at Colenso or in the open plain like the Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Irish men who endured and fought and died to protect Mafeking.—The Spectator.

To Stop Record Marches.

Some of the army boots now being made in Leeds are of an extraordinary character, the substance of the soles being five-eighths of an inch in thickness. When to this substance is added the steel bills in the bottom it would seem that the boot is far too heavy for marching wear. It would be interesting to have the opinion of a practical soldier, such as, say, Lord Roberts, or "B. P." on such official foolishness.—Shoe and Leather Record.

A SARNIA LADY

Tells How Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills Cured Her Nervous Troubles and Strengthened Her Weak System.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are an inestimable boon to anyone suffering from any disease or derangement of the heart or nerves or whose blood is thin and watery. Mrs. E. Horning, of 115 George Street, Sarnia, Ont., is one of those whose experience with this remedy is well worth considering.

It is as follows:—"I am pleased to recommend Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills to anyone suffering from nerve trouble, no matter how severe or how long standing. "For years my nerves have been in a terribly weak condition, but Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, which I got at Geary's Pharmacy, have strengthened them greatly and invigorated my system, leaving me no excuse for not making known their virtues."

"I cannot refrain from recommending these pills to all sufferers as a splendid cure for nervousness and weakness."
