

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are just what every weak, nervous, run-down woman needs to make her strong and well.

The v cure those feelings of smothering and sinking that come on at times, make the heart beat strong and regular, give sweet, refreshing sleep and banish headaches and nervousness. They infuse new life and energy into dispirited, health-shattered women, who have come to think there is no cure for them.

Read the words of encouragement in this letter from Mrs. Thos. Sommars, Clifton, New London, P.E.I.

"Last fall I was in a very serious condition suffering from nervousness and weakness, I got so bad at last that I could hardly move around, and despaired of ever getting well. Seeing Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills highly recommended for such conditions I purchased a box.

"Before I had taken half of it I could notice an improvement in my condition and when I had used two boxes I was completely cured.

"It was wonderful how these pills took away that dreadful feeling of nervousness and gave me strength.

"I recommended them to my neighbor who was troubled with nervousness, and they cured her, too. We all think there is nothing equal to Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.'

CHARLES COMBEN,

EMERSON L. HAGERMAN,

MINE ENEMY.

Once in my pride I judged a man,
With eyes austere I looked him through,
I said, "Here failed he." Span by span
I measured all his faults anew.

And thenceforth marked in bitter mood
The manner of his life, intent
To find therein such constant food That my just heart might not relent.

I probed his thoughts, his motives weighed, And yet as on his hopes I peered, Though some I might have crushed, I staid My hand-they were so humbly reared.

And, keeping watch with doubtful eves On all his actions. I began To mark with measureless surprise

How very human was the man.

Till, by a casual cross wind blown, Came word of trifling acts of his-Poor common things-in which was shown His touch with common charities.

Then, seeing how much I had denied
Who loved the name of charity,
I bowed my head with shame and cried, "Forgive me, O mine enemy!"

LORD ROBERTS MASTER OF MEN. Julian Ralph Describes the Hero of Pre

In person he is "Little Bobs."

He is one of those small packages in which the gods have so often packed military genius, as if it were a rare commodity, not obtainable in bulk. He dresses in serge khaki, which, plain as that always must be, he renders the more plain by ridding it of all orders and decorations.

There are men on his staff-there was even an American newspaper reporter with one of the armies who wear a line and a half of ribbons. But he chief, who is entitled to perhaps four lines, appears every day, for every duty and function, with a tunic as bare of decorations as that of any civilian. He is so neat and precise in his dress that I suspect he must have been a dandy in earlier life. He is quick and nervous in his movements, and his constant habit is to thrust either one or both hands under his beltpractice which makes it easy for artists to familiarize his figure with the public. He is instantaneous and direct in conversation, and goes as straight to the point in view as a well-aimed bullet to a target. I have noticed that when he meets new people he advances towards them eagerly, listens intently, and in three minutes either engages the new acquaintance in earnest conversation or has done with him with a decisive nod of parting.

With the army in South Africa his head. quarters form a court-almost as if he were a part of the Royalty he represents. You do not call upon him. You sign your name in a book, and he sends for you later if he wants to see you. It may be a duke whom you find in the central salle of the residency -as it was in my case-and who offers the register

The field marshal works continuously, and to do so has to be free from interruption; therefore visitors meet him only at lunch or dinner. In Bloemfontein, where he was living between walls, his table was a small one standing a few feet from the head of the very large long table at which sat his staffhis ponderous, impressive staff of distinguished men of the acistocracy. You dined with "Pobs" in khaki, of course, at his small table-if you were highly honoured; or you may dine with his staff and be presented to him after the meal for as long or brief an interview as he pleases.

That is precisely the amount and extent of state about his surroundings. But all state vanishes when you touch the hand of "the Little Man," and talk with him about the two subjects which engross him-the war around him and politics at home.

If you wonder that politics finds such spacious lodgment as they do in his mind, you have not remembered how politics have affected him in his career as a general, here in South Africa-when he could have prevented this war by a vastly smaller one-in Kandahar; in many fields.

Lord Roberts never smokes tobacco, and with drink has little to do. A glass of wine those who drink to excess. He presides at meetings of the Army Temperance Associa. tion and extols sobriety, but, like all broad. minded men, he refrains from advocating the impossible-one form of which is total abstinence. He has never been known to use an oath, and, indeed, there must be comparatively few men whose religion influences them so deeply as does his in every affair of life. He never parades his piety; never forces it upon those around him. Yet on every Sunday since he joined his army he has attended Divine service. Not a word has he ever spoken to his staff suggesting or ordering their presence- yet he is certain to attend the weekly service-an example to the army so modestly and so persistently presented that it cannot help but be powerful. When he took the sacrament at Driefontein, the other day, in the face, one might say, of the whole army, it was without a hint of the parading of religion. All saw it in an act of

It is almost as hard to reconcile his gentleness and sympathy with the fira. - sometimes steru-course which a general so supreme in command, and at the head of so large an army, must often have to follow. I have asked many of his friends how he can be both sorts of men at once-how he can possess traits which we imagine must war with one another.

"He does possess them, that's all," is the best answer I have had; "I don't know how, but he does." His army will do anything for him; march longer, starve harder, go without tents, blankets, and rum more days and weeks, and die in greater numbers for him than for any man alive. And they will do all these things willingly and gladly where other armies might protest and grumble and go ahead with sullenness. He can get more out of an army, from the Guards down to the roughest scouting force (as he did between Modder river and Bloemfontein), than any Russian or German general could have extorted with iron discipline and adamantine authority. It was the so-called "London pels"—the Guards who broke all European records in a three days' march into the Free State. Instead of grumbling they make it a master of boasting. Whenever other privates would damn another leader, Roberts' men say, simply, "Bogs knows what he "e's about"; "Bobs will do the job." It sufficies the majority merely to sum him up with this phrase, "'E is a man!" He can make no mistake that his army will recognize. Whatever he orders or does is regarded as the reflection of superhuman inspiration.

Even if he fails he is certain to be considered infallible at the end. There may have been more than one Wellington at the head of Briton's armies in the past, but there has never been a previous Roberts-never in English history has there been such idolatry, or any such magnetic leader.

"The men feel that they know him and that he knows them," I was told. "It is a case of love returned for love and admiration exchanged for admiration." He scrupulously returns the salute of every Tommy he meets. He speaks to hundreds about whatever he sees them doing, or whatever interests him or rouses his curiosity. He thanks who ever does anything for him, and compliments all who are smart or soldier-like in manner and brave in service. He knows the names of a multitude of men.

"Sometimes," said a general, "when I have been with him inspecting regiments in a new command, he has said: 'Now, in this regiment are those fellows who did soand so at Kabul,' or Tirah or anywhere. And he asks for them by name and talks to them. He is sharp on offenders, and can detect looting, defects in dress, misbehaviour of any sort with so quick and keen an eye that the men feel-in this is his courtesy-that he is one of them. They know that he is to be reckoned with in every way. The officers are as anxious to please the field marshal as the men, and one class think no less of his genius and his marvellous per sonality than the other. Those who are near to him say that when he is talking to an officer about his work, "he makes you feel that you have his entire confidence, and that he believes you will do the bussness better than any one else could do it. But if you do it wrong he will tell you so frankly, and will point out the why and wherefore of his displeasure. And I don't envy the feelings of a man who knows he has displeased the chief." In using men he is as broad as the sky. His estimate of a man's fitness or value for whatever purpose he need him is never in the least affected by any knowledge he may have of irregularities in the man's private life.

Above all else, "Bobs" is a man of action. His life is all activity, and his mind works with his body-that is, in the heat of affairs and of movement his brain is coolest and works most quickly. His compact, nervy little body is all a reservoir of strength, and you can speak of his physique as you speak of the physique of a giant. Indeed, he lives on his nerve and draws upon his strength, as if both were inexhaustible. He will sit and write for ten days on end, dealing with a multitude of varied subjects-civil, military, covering the enormous range of view of a soldier and an administrator; and then, if the need comes, he will bounce on a horse and ride tifty or sixty miles, tiring lieutenants whose lives are spent in the saddle.

He lives very plainly, asking for few com forts and no luxuries. When he visited Modder river he found Lord Methuen estab lished in the hotel, and that general had been at the pains to clear out a part of the building and appoint it for the field marshal's lodgings. But Lord Roberts, thanking him, remarked that he had ordered his tent to be set on the veldt, and that there he meant to stay. When his army is in motion, marching and fighting, he travels with a covered waggon and a tent, the first being his house and the second his work-room. The waggon is a light four-wheeled contrivance whose top is a roomy and complete enclosure, and defence against rain and cold wind. On the sideboard is painted "F. M. Lord Roberts," so that we may all know it when it comes

Such is the famous "Bobs"-like so many other men at so many points, so ordinary in a hundred little human ways, yet so separated from us all in other respects—in other respects which seem to us superhuman, that are antagonistic to much of what we know of him, that are unscrutable, that seem illogical en we try to account for him.
