Forget Business at Night.
 Every business man of common sense knows, whether he chooses to acknowledge it or not, that the farther away he gets in the evening from his commercial associations during the day, so that his business associates or thoughts of it or them cannot get at him, the healthier he is, the wiser life he leads; in short, the better off he is in every respect, and the abler for the duties of the morrow. Writes Edward Bek of "The American Man and the Country," in the July Ladies' Home Journal. Now, what does he get in the city in the evening, even if he lives a carefully regulated life? There is no mode of life he can possibly follow which is in any way recuperative to his mental or physical being. He has never been out of hearing of the noises of the city or out of the range of its lights. Every night he has slept in the polluted air of the city, and in the morning has looked out on the gray sidewalks which he sees all day long. What does such a man know of the exhilarating, refreshing and blood-quickening experience of opening the shutters of his chamber window upon a landscape of space and sunshine? And what is far worse, what do his wife and children know of such a blessing? Yet he deludes himself into the belief that he must live in the city so as to be "in touch with things." If you ask him what those "things" are you invariably discover that they are of a business nature, either strictly business or some social convention which he feels has a bearing on his business. But it is always business, business! Now, a man living under this pressure rarely does his best work, although he fully believes that he is doing it. But he cannot be giving out the best because he does not allow the best to get within him.

Thunder, Lightning and Fear.

A current news item, says The Electrical Engineer, gives the results of an investigation carried out by Dr. G. Stanley Hall, President of Clark University, on the things that most excite fear in people. Of the 298 classes of objects of fear to which 1707 persons confessed, thunder and lightning led all the rest, although in certain localities, as, for instance, those subject to cyclones, etc., the fear of the latter predominates. It may be accepted as probably true that thunderstorms constitute the most pronounced source of fear with the majority of people, due, no doubt, to the always impressive and not infrequently overpowering nature of the phenomenon. But is there any justification in fact for this fear so far as fatal results are concerned? We believe there is not, but on the contrary that many other causes, which barely have a place in Dr. Hall's list, are infinitely more entitled to the distinction as fear producers than lightning. As proof of this we may cite statistics of the United States Weather Bureau. These show that in the four years 1890-93, the deaths from lightning numbered 784, or an average of 169 a year. Again, Mr. H. F. Kretzer of St. Louis found from the records of nearly 200 newspapers that for the five years 1883-88 there were 330 deaths caused by lightning, or an average of 206 a year. We doubt whether, of the number of deaths classed as "accidental" in the whole United States, any one group can show so small a number. In New York city alone over 200 people are drowned every year, while nearly 150 are burnt or scalded to death, and close on to 500 persons meet their end by falls of one kind or another. Comparing the record of 20 fatalities for the whole country, with the above records for New York city, with its total of nearly 1500 accidental deaths every year, it will be seen how groundless is the popular fear of lightning. It is a survival, an inherited superstition.

But there is another point in connection with this matter, which ought to be particularly comforting to city dwellers, albeit country dwellers may not be affected in like manner, and that is, that statistics show that the risk of lightning is five time greater in the country than in the city. The cause of this immunity for city dwellers is not far to seek.

It is doubtless due to the predominance of metal roofs, the well grounded water pipes in houses, and probably as much as anything to the protective net work of overhead electric wires of all kinds. The popular belief that a stroke of lightning is invariably fatal is also not born out by facts. Indeed, one record specially devoted to this feature shows that of 212 persons struck, only 74 were killed. Taking it all in all, there seems to be no more groundless popular fear than that of lightning. Indeed, if one can go by statistics, the risk of meeting death by a horse kick in New York is over 50 per cent. greater than that of death by lightning. Yet with all weight of statistics against its deadliness, lightning will probably continue to scare people as here tofore. Perhaps, after all, there may be a more direct cause than the mere psychological one usually ascribed to it, and that is the fact that many people of nervous temperament are affected hours before the approach of a thunderstorm and thus rendered particularly powerless to stand the strain which more or less affects even the most phlegmatic natures during a disturbance in the heavens.

A Bright Idea

Was that of Dr. Chase when he discovered a combined treatment for disorders of the kidneys and liver and so provided a cure for complicated diseases of these organs which were formerly incurable. Dr. A. W. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are the greatest cure for kidney, liver and stomach troubles, and has an enormous sale in all parts of Canada and the United States. One pill a dose. 25 cents a box.

THE ELEPHANT'S TOOTHACHE.

That an elephant should have the toothache is one of the things that has probably come under the observation or reflection of few people in this world of ours. The biggest elephant with the Ringling show, in Indianapolis, Ind., is paradoxically named "Babe." This huge animal last winter got very uneasy and troubled her keepers. She didn't eat much and looked as if the way of things didn't suit her. Now, while the elephant is usually looked on by the crowd as a good-natured beast, as a matter of fact, when it gets in a tantrum, it is the hardest of all to manage, and is more anxiously watched by those in charge than any other animal in the menagerie. Therefore it was when "Babe" began to sulk the management got worried, and a good deal of time and talk were used in trying to find out the cause and bring the big beast back to her former placid mood. The Ringlings winter their show at Baraboo, Wis., which is the cherished birthplace of the family, and an humble barber of that town solved the difficulty. He said that "Babe" had the toothache.

This may have been a guess, but whether or not, Mr. Alexander thought he could find out. It took a lot of prodding to make "Babe" open her mouth for inspection. Then it was found that a tooth was really badly decayed and the gums considerably inflamed. Several remedies were applied without any apparent effect, and then it was decided to extract the tooth. As the last resort however, Dr. Richmond, a dentist of New York, was appealed to, as "Babe" had already lost several teeth, and a further sacrifice of this kind, of course, would not help her digestion. Dr. Richmond said the tooth could be filled, and immediately set about to perform the task.

This brought him face to face with one of the greatest jobs in his experience. To kill the nerve wires almost as thick as spiral springs were necessary. It was a slow process, several of the animal caretakers had all they could do under Dr. Richmond's directions. The elephant was relieved from pain with copious applications of cocaine as the work progressed, and, the wonderful intelligence of her species, she seemed to know the cause of this relief. She kept her mouth open and the men had no trouble in performing the work. Special tools had to be made for cleaning, grinding out and filling the cavity, and the trimming and digging out were done with a keen-edged tool almost as large and heavy as a cold chisel.

Value of Red Pepper.

The value of cayenne pepper as a condiment is generally acknowledged, but its efficacy in certain irritable states of the stomach may not be so well known. In seasickness, for example, broths, free from fat and liberally seasoned with red pepper, will often relieve nausea and allow of other food being taken. Tincture of capsicum is also of value as a counter irritant in place of mustard, a few drops being sprinkled on a cloth wrung out in hot water and applied over the painful part. In rheumatism, stiff neck, and in black eye, a mixture of equal parts of tincture of capsicum and mucilage of gum arabic with a few drops of glycerine is of value. The painful or bruised surface is painted with this mixture, which is allowed to dry on, the painting being being repeated a second or third time if necessary.

To Clean Kid Gloves.

Kid or suede gloves can be cleaned by being placed in a small basin and covered with benzoline. After soaking a few minutes knead and squeeze them well, and any specially soiled part, such as the tips of the fingers, may be rubbed separately. After rubbing any part immerse the whole glove, or it will be marked with the rubbing. Squeeze out one at a time and draw quickly on the hand and rub lightly and evenly over with a soft, clean rag until perfectly dry. If the rubbing is heavy or unequal the glove will be streaky. Draw the glove carefully from the hand and hang it in a current of air for a few hours. Benzoline is highly inflammable and must not be used in a room with either gas or fire; even strong sunshine is better to be avoided.

The Old Reliable Remedy for Diarrhoea and Dysentery.

Grandma Mrs. Thos. Sherlock, Arnprior, Ont., recently wrote: Used It. "My little girl, three years of age, was taken very bad with diarrhoea, and we thought we were going to lose her, when I remembered that my grandmother always used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and often said that it saved her life. I got a bottle and gave it to my child, and after the third dose she began to get better and slept well that night. She improved right along and was soon completely cured."
