THE KING'S TITLE.

There is a movement on foot, which from some accounts seems to come from His Majesty Edward VII, to find a new and more magnificent title for the King of England. The king is said to have suggested "His Imperial Majesty" with some reference to the allied nations, Canada and Australia.

The growth of the imperial idea has been rapid in recent years, and two causes of its growth may be said to have been the personality of our late Queen and the poetry of Kipling. The sight of a lonely and lovable woman, especially of a woman with the admirable character and charming personality of our late beloved Queen, will always awaken the chivalry in men's hearts, and when to this we add the poetical appeal to the brotherhood of all who live beneath the Union Jack, the great growth of the imperial idea is, at least in a measure, explained, and during the war yet in progress in South Africa the substantial reality of the imperial feeling has been demonstrated.

What the actual relationship between Great Britain and the colonies has now become or may become is not quite ready to be written down and any attempt at this time to express the present or future relationship by tinkering with the King's title is premature. The feeling of Canada for Great Britain was never so warm as it is today, but any attempt on the part of the imperial government to patronize us or flatter the King, by the addition of the name of Canada to his title, might in some quarters cause a revulsion of feeling which would bode no good to this great aggregation that bears some resemblance to an Empire but is not yet one.

It might be well for the King to emulate the modesty of his mother in such a matter as this rather than the bumptiousness of his renowned nephew the Emperor of Germany.

These are the days of democracy, and any reversion to mediaeval expressions of superiority, or the assumption, even in the most innocent language, of the right on the part of Great Britain to garnish her own crown with Canada's name, might come with an unpleasant shock to some who are today more loyal to Great Britain than they have ever been before. Let it be remembered that, to the most enlightened Canadians this loyalty is now not a personal love for a Sovereign, but a respect and admiration for the excellent form of government and the excellent administration of it which the great middle class of England has brought forth and developed. By a large number of earnest, hard headed, warm hearted people, the Sovereign will be respected as the figure head for all the people who dwell beneath the flag, but to them, nothing could so become him as modesty, and any attempt to clothe him with high sounding names, involving the assumption of any personal lordship over Canada, would not be wise at the present time. Even by the puritanical element who disapproved some of the excess of the Prince of Wales, it was thought that Edward VII would prove a modest, wise and tactful Sovereign, but this desire on his part to be called "His Imperial Majesty" is a shock to them and to others who are less exacting as well.

SMALL POX.

There is no necessity for people to become panic stricken over the fact that there are a couple of cases of small pox in the county.

In Carleton County, where there is no poverty, where people are cleanly in their habits, and where there are plenty of physicians who keep abreast of the times in their profession, there is every reason to believe that the disease can be kept from spreading beyond the houses where it now has a footing.

Let people take the ordinary precaution of being vaccinated and no fear may be entertained of the thing becoming an epidemic.

Another Absent-Minded Professor.

A certain absent-minded professor went to see a friend who had been seriously ill, but who was now convalescent, and took a fine bunch of hothouse grapes for the invalid. The old friends were naturally delighted to see each other and were soon deep in an interesting discussion. The professor, with his usual absent-mindedness, began picking the grapes, taking one at a time till every one was gone.

When the time came for him to take his departure he said to his friend: "Now, mind you eat those grapes. They will do you all the good in the world," and went out of the room quite ignorant of the fact that he had devoured them himself.

Death of Seth Milbury.

Seth Milbury, who died at his home in the borough of Brooklyn, New York City, Wednesday, July seventeenth, was well known and highly esteemed in this county and province where he resided until his removal to the United States in 1891, whither all his sons had preceded him. Mr. Milbury had been in feeble health for years, but the end was sudden and unexpected; his mind, however, was preserved in all its vigor to the last day of his life. Mr. Milbury was born in Wicklow nearly seventy-six years ago, and was the son of Nathan and Margery Squires Milbury.

Nathan Milbury was born in New England, where two brothers Milbury from Yorkshire, England, settled about the middle of the seventeenth century in what is now Portsmouth, N. H. As a child he emigrated to Canada with his family, who were loyalists, sailing from Salem, Mass. He used to relate as one of his earliest recollections, that hearing cannon as they sailed out of Salem Harbor to seek a new home he inquired the cause; the reply was that the Americans were firing salutes in celebration of the signing of the Treaty of Independence. Mr. Nathan Milbury, Mr. Holland Estey, Mr. Samuel Estey and Mr. Murphy Giberson were among the first, if not the first, settlers of upper Carleton County. After making his first clearing and planting his first crop, Mr. Milbury went to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, to marry Miss Margery Squires, whose family also were loyalists and whose father, Jabez Squires, had been a soldier in the British army. Both Mr. and Mrs. Milbury died at Wicklow many years ago at advanced ages.

Seth Milbury married Hannah, daughter of Murphy and Lydia Stickney Giberson, another loyalist family; Mrs. Milbury's grandfather Giberson having been born in New Jersey and an officer of dragoons in the English army during the Revolutionary war.

Mr. Milbury began his business life as a lumberman in which he was extensively engaged for many years, at the same time farming and carrying on a general mercantile business at Florenceville, where he settled upon his marriage and where he resided until his removal to Wicklow in 1865.

Mr. Milbury was a man of large public spirit and was always found actively at work for any cause that appeared to him to be for the public weal. As a boy of fourteen he began his work for temperance, which ended only with his life, by attending a temperance meeting with his father and brothers, which made so strong an impression that when they returned home that evening the rum barrel, then a necessary part of the larder of almost every respectable family, was rolled into the yard, its head knocked in and the contents poured out. After that time intoxicating liquor was never admitted within the home or between the lips of any member of that family.

Mr. Milbury was a passionate lover of education and of literature and, although born on the extreme eastern frontier of America, restricted to the most limited school facilities and chiefly self-educated, was a man of unusual intellectual acquisitions and force. Possibly it was his own lack of educational opportunities as a boy that made him one of the earliest and most strenuous advocates of a Free School System for New Brunswick. Always did he contend that it was the duty of the State to educate its children.

From the beginning of the agitation for Canadian Federation, Mr. Milbury enthusiastically labored for this cause. His faith in federation and in a glorious future for Canada continued to grow till the day of his death; and, although removed to the United States, his interest in his native county and province and in the dominion never suffered abatement. He kept thoroughly informed on home affairs, and it was one of his delights to point out to his American neighbors the vastness, wealth and power of the British Empire, and particularly the steady, rapid, substantial development of the dominion and its unlimited possibilities.

Mr. and Mrs. Milbury had been planning with all the enthusiasm of youth to visit their old home this summer.

Mr. Milbury was a man of genuine piety zealous religious devotion, a member of the church for nearly fifty years, and ever active and generous in church work. He was conscious till his last breath and his parting words, after leaving love for all his family and relatives, and friends, were, "All is bright ahead" and a reference to his "blessed Saviour." The funeral sermon was preached by his pastor, the Rev. W. C. P. Rhoades, from the texts "For me to die is gain," and "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." In New Brunswick he was a member of the Free Baptist denomination, and in New York of the Marcy Avenue Baptist church. He was, however, broad and tolerant in his views, and denominational lines did not circumscribe his sympathy or generosity. As an evidence of the tolerance of his nature may be mentioned the fact that as a young man he was an Orangeman, but that he soon resigned from that organization because he believed the time had come to cultivate harmony and union, rather than discord and division.

New Brunswick's far famed hospitality was liberally practised by Mr. and Mrs. Milbury, and their home was always a rendezvous.

Mr. Milbury is survived by his wife, four sons, Arthur Wellesley, Edward Goddard, L. A. Wilmot, and Seth Ryerson, all in business in New York, and one daughter, Ina.

PALE and DEJECTED.

THE TRYING CONDITION OF MANY WOMEN

Subject to Headaches, Dizziness and Heart Palpitation, they Grow Discouraged and Prematurely Old.

From the Review, Windsor, Ont.

"Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that ever gave me any real benefit," said Mrs. R. K. Harris, a well known resident of Windsor, to a representative of the Review recently. "I do not know exactly what my trouble was; doctors seemed unable to tell me, though I thought myself it was consumption. I had a constant racking cough, and a constant feeling of languidness. My blood seemed to have turned to water, and I was very pale. I had a feeling in my chest as though some foreign substance was lodged there. The slightest noise made me nervous; I was dejected all the time and could not scarcely do any household work. I tried medicines, but they did not help me in the least. Doctors did not seem able to help me or tell me what ailed me, although their bills increased with alarming rapidity. I grew so weak, and so despondent that finally I decided to take a trip to Colorado to see if a change of climate would benefit me. While contemplating this trip I read in a letter one day the testimonial of a person whose symptoms were almost identical with my own, who was cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I decided to give them a trial and purchased a box. When that box was done I got another, and found gradually that the pills were helping me. The trip to Colorado was abandoned, and I continued using the pills until I had taken eight or nine boxes when I felt like an altogether different person. From a pale, thin, listless person, I became the picture of health, and felt it too. It is several years since I used the pills, and I have not had any return of the trouble. I am positive Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved me from an early grave, and I cannot recommend them too highly to those who are afflicted as I was."

It is the mission of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to make rich, red blood, nourish the nerves, tissues and various organs of the body, and thus by reaching the root of the trouble, drive disease from the system. Other medicines act only on the symptoms of the disease, and when such medicines are discontinued, the trouble returns—often in an aggravated form. If you want health and strength, be sure the full name, "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People," is on the wrapper around each box. If your dealer cannot supply you the pills will be sent post paid at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Unknown Facts About a Well-Known Artist.

While the work of Charles Dana Gibson is probably as well known as that of any modern illustrator, the artist himself has succeeded in modestly keeping rather in the background. Now, however, his admirers will have a chance to learn all about him in an illustrated article by his intimate friend, James S. Metcalfe, the managing editor of "Life," which will be published in a forthcoming issue of The Ladies' Home Journal. This is the first time that the creator of "the Gibson girl" and other famous types in current illustration has been described as he really is.

NOTICE TO FARMERS.

We have decided to buy lambs this season by the lb., to be weighed as collected. We feel confident that this is the proper way to buy and sell lambs and if farmers would co-operate with us we are sure they would find it to their interest to sell their lambs by weight. We advise weighing lambs before selling to see if we are not offering more by the lb. than they would come to by the head.
