What I Saw Across the Sea.

BY S. M. BOYER.

NO. 19.

I promised my readers in my last letter an account of what tipping meant at Paris. Tipping is a fine art. It seems to be as much of an institution of Paris as its municipal council. The Canadian who travels through the cities of Britain gets a mild initiation into this continental custom, but the tipping which prevails across the channel and in Paris is the genuine article. The tip is the one great centre of gravity around which the whole fabric of the city rotates. It is a function in which all, rich and poor, have an equal part. Our first experience in this important matter was the first night of our arrival in Paris. Being somewhat late at night reaching the city and long past the hour for dinner which here as in other places is from six to seven o'clock we took a lunch before going to bed and paid for it but made the great blunder in not tipping the waiters. The next morning having some business with the landlord he reminded us that we had not paid for our lunch the night before. As the waiters had made this statement our blood was up and I demanded an explanation as I had proof the bill was paid. He backed down and nothing further was heard of the matter. The waiters had kept the amount for their tip. You cannot get away from the tip here. It is a part of the unwritten law of the land. When you enter the hotel the porter takes your luggage to the room and tip is the word. On the way to the dining rooms the first thing you know two of the attendants are each on one side of you with brush in hand to groom you down. Next they show you the palm of their hand. You are no sooner seated in the dining room than the all important matter, the tip, is expected. Without it you sit there hungry. Fail to tip these autocrats of the dining halls, door ways, bed chambers, and your troubles will be such you will think of Job. In your indignation you rise up and say you will not pay the tip but only the legal hotel fare. My friend, you make a mistake, you do not know Paris. They have a way to make you pay when your letters arrive at your hotel. You must tip to have them sent to your room. If you need postage stamps you must pay for them with the added tip. If your mail is carried to the mail bag in the hotel tip again. If you engage a cab, pay the regular fare and tip the driver. If you take a lunch at a cafe you will pay your fare at the counter and leave your tip for the waiter near your plate. In the high class restaurants on being seated at the table you give your order which is taken down by the waiter and the price of every dish is marked. When you are through your bill is sent to the clerk with your money and comes back receipted you pay the tip and you are free until you call around again. I called in to a barber shop to get shaved, paid the usual fee seventy-five centimes, fifteen cents Canadian money, and the custom is to hand about the same amount to the next barber near you. You are obliged to tip the policemen if you want to know where the Rue de so and so is. At a seven course dinner you will have to tip the waiter more than once if you want an extra glass of wine. About this time you will begin to kick. What is the use my friend? It is part of the game in Paris. If you do not like it do not come here but if you do come I say tip. Our time having now come to leave Paris we bid adieu to the gay capital and take the train at St. Lazare station for Rouen and Dieppe. Nothing of importance occurred on our return journey by rail to Dieppe. As we neared the city I began to think of my experience in crossing the channel and began to nerve up for a like experience. However I was happily disappointed in reaching the harbour. The channel was as smooth as a lake and the sail across to New Haven was delightful. Arriving in New Haven we are glad to get on British soil. We call at the exchange office and leave our French money in exchange for English, pass through the custom office where our luggage is inspected, this through with we are soon on the train speeding our way toward London. The section of country through which we pass here is not as good as in other parts of England. Arriving at Victoria station we procure a cab and soon find ourselves seated in our hotel, Russel square. One day is spent in London and with many regrets we leave the great metropolis. At Paddington station we take the train for Oxford, the great seat of learning. As an institution it dates back to the time of Alfred the Great. A short time is spent here. We then leave the great north western and take a branch line to Stratford on Avon the birthplace of Shakespeare. Of all the ancient castles and monuments throughout England the house of William Shakespeare is perhaps the most interesting and popular. The chief literary glory of the world was born here, April 23rd, 1564, which gives his home an ancient and noted history. The chief object of attraction at Stratford on Avon is the house where Shakespeare was born more than three hundred years ago. Our party in company with Americans first visit the Shakespeare home. It is owned by the city of Stratford and is now filled with relics of the great poet. It is quite a museum. We purchase tickets and are shown through the house by attendants. There are many distinguished autographs on the walls and on one of the windows is the name of Sir Walter Scott. This house was built by Shakespeare's father who was a farmer and wool merchant. The house seems to have

Bent Nearly Double With Bright's Disease.

A Severe and Torturing Case of Bright's Disease—A Justice of the Peace Certifies to the Cure by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. James Dellihunt, a much respected Justice of the Peace, Ont., states: "I was a sufferer from Bright's Disease for several years, and at times the tortures of mind and body were almost beyond endurance. The pains were in my head, between the shoulders and down the whole spine, concentrating across the kidneys, where I was never entirely free from pain. When I got up in the morning I went about bent over nearly double. It gave me great pain to urinate, and at times the water was very scanty. Medicines seemed to have little or no effect in my case, until I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. The first dose relieved me, and five boxes entirely cured me. I have no pains in my kidneys, and can do as good a day's work as I ever could."

Mr. J. J. Ward, J.P., of Consocon, certifies that he knows Mr. Dellihunt's statement of his cure to be correct and true and without exaggeration. It seems foolish to trifle with new-fangled medicines when you can get the tested and proven kind. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, one pill a dose, 25 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto. Agents wanted for Dr. Chase's last and complete Receipt Book. been built of wood and stone. Large oak timbers are used in the form of a frame and stone is used for the walls. The floors are all of flag stone. The building is two story. In the upper story the guide showed us a large room formerly used by Shakespeare's father to stow away wool. Under glass cases are to be seen a number of his plays and a fine picture of the poet in his early days hangs upon the wall. Great care is taken of this picture. It is put in an iron safe at night and locked. The city corporation has been offered nearly six hundred pounds for the painting. Here can be seen the desk and chair that he used at school. I sat in the chair and wrote a part of what I am now writing. Old fashioned fire places built of stone are on both flats and some of the furniture used by Shakespeare at that date. After having gone through the house we visit the school house where he studied, built in 1400. These buildings are all the property of the town and are kept in good preservation for the benefit of travellers who through the summer months file in and out constantly. An old lady who kept a store near by where I made some purchases told me the summer was their harvest as people from all parts of the world visited the poet's home and bought something in the town as a souvenir of their visit. For thirty miles around the country is called Shakespeare's country. We return to our hotel and take a cab for a drive out into the country to the home of Ann Hathaway. The name of the place is called Shottery. This cottage was built in the 14th century. It is one story, built of stone and the roof thatched with straw. Arriving at the cottage we pay an entrance fee and gain admission. An old lady and her daughter had the care of the cottage. The old lady told me she was about the last of the descendants and the cottage had been in their name nearly four hundred years. The first room we enter is the kitchen. The floor was of flat stone, irregular, and the spaces filled with clay. A fire place and chimney of stone, a chain with long links hung down the chimney to which hooks were attached for the use of pots and kettles. Part of the furniture in the house was 400 years old. On one side of the fire place was a plate bench made of boards upon which the poet sat and courted his wife, Ann Hathaway. I noticed one end of the bench had been chipped off somehow. The old lady told me Americans had done it to get relics to carry home, and they put a stop to that. The old lady showed us some very ancient dishes and a side board used for dishes 200 years old. In one of the chambers was some furniture 400 years old.

How the Major Beat the Train Robbers.

'Speaking of train robberies,' said a veteran railway man to an after-dinner group in the St. Charles lobby the other evening, 'did any of you fellows ever hear that story about Major Patterson? The yarn is not new,' he continued, 'and I thought some of you might have heard it before; but it happened to be strictly true, and is worth telling again. Years ago the major was travelling on the railway through Western Kansas when he fell into conversation with a very agreeable chap from St. Louis. Train robberies were frequent in those days and when the conversation finally turned to that subject the St. Louis man remarked that he had an excellent scheme for hiding his money in such an emergency. "I simply put it under the sweat-band of my hat," he said, "and no robber in the world would ever think of looking there for cash." With that he pulled off his hat and showed where he had $250 "plated" as he described. "About an hour later the train was suddenly halted while it was turning a lonely ravine, and in a few moments a masked man entered the car and began to systematically loot the passengers, while two other robbers kept them covered with shotguns from the doors. When the fellow reached him the Major looked up coolly and declared he had less than a dollar in his pocket. "Now, if you'll leave me that and my watch," he said, "I'll tell you something worth knowing: That fellow in the next seat has $250 under the sweat-band of his hat." "All right," said the robber, "keep your watch and chicken feed," and he proceeded to confiscate the other passenger's cash. When the agony was all over and the marauders had departed the St. Louis man turned around, bursting with rage and indignation. "That was a dirty, low down trick!" he roared, "and I'm going to hold you accountable for every cent of my money!" "I expect you to, my friend," replied the Major, quietly, "and here is the amount. You see," he added, "I happen to be a paymaster in the United States army, and I have a matter of forty thousand dollars in this valise by my feet. Under the circumstances I felt justified in temporarily sacrificing your little two hundred and fifty dollars to divert attention. I shall charge it up to the government as 'extra expense in transportation of funds.' " "—Railroad Digest.'

A MacLean and A Campbell.

(Chambers' Journal.) When Sir Archibald Campbell was Governor of New Brunswick he chanced to meet with an aged Highlander of the name of Maclean, who had done brave soldiering service for his country and had borne himself well in many a fierce encounter. After his discharge he had settled in the woods; but things had not gone smoothly with him and his circumstances were quite straitened. Axious to befriend him, His Excellency invited him to make his home at Government House, where he could find easy work to do in blacking boots and shoes and such like things. The old man was quite indignant, the hot blood mounted to his cheeks; and drawing himself up to full height, he replied, with all the dignity of a lord, "Na, na, sir—na, na. A Maclean never blackit a boot for a Campbell." He preferred privation with independence on the farm to ease as a menial in a rich man's house—a feeling that was appreciated by no one more warmly than by the genial and kind-hearted Governor.

A Pleasant Prospect.

He had sailed down hill over rough stones until he was jolted into nervous despair. He was hoping for a better way back, but in his desire to find new roads and new experience he had wandered far and he was lost. He dismounted and leaned disconsolately over his bicycle. Suddenly a native came around the bend of the way.

'Can you tell me how I can get back to town?' he asked.

'Ye kin go the way ye come, but I guess ye'll hev to carry that thing on yer back.'

'Yes, I know; but is there no other road?'

'Ye kin go 'round by the school-house, but the sand is 'bout a foot deep.'

'Is that the only way?'

'No; ye kin go over the river way, but ez the bridge was washed away last week I guess ye'll hev to swim a good bit to git across.'

'Then, what am I to do?'

'I don't know, mister; but ef I was in your place I'd pray for a balloon.'—Leslie's Weekly.'

Feeble, Wasted Nerves Aroused to New Life.

A Sufferer For Years From Weak Heart, Exhausted Nerves and Sleeplessness Cured by Five Boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Whether weakened and wasted by overwork, worry or disease, the result of exhausted nerves is felt in neuralgic pains, nervous headache, dyspepsia, serious functional derangements and ultimately in paralysis, epilepsy, locomotor ataxia, prostration or insanity, the remedy is found in Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, as is proven in the case referred to below:— Mr. Charles H. Jones, Pierceton, Que., writes:—"For years I have been a great sufferer with my head and nerves. I would take sleeping pills and a dizzy swimming feeling would come over me. Night after night I would never close my eyes, and my head would ache as though it would burst. At last I had to keep to my bed, although my doctor attended me, and I fell to spirits, his medicines did not help me. "I have now taken five boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and I have done me more good than I ever did from a medicine could give. I feel as though I am my gratitude for the wonderful cure brought about by this treatment. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, 6 boxes for $2.50, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Toronto.
