Where He Was Going.

The following story of how a bully was subdued on a rail-road train by a courageous conductor is told in the Baltimore Sun by D. E. Monroe, of the Baltimore bar. Mr. Monroe was coming eastward over the Atchison Railroad one night in the fall of 1877. The train stopped at Dodge City, which was then the most important point for the shipment of cattle in southwest Kansas. Some of the worst characters on the frontier made their headquarters there. A number of passengers of the true frontier type boarded the train.

Among them was a fellow who particularly attracted my attention because of his burly form and coarse, and I could not but think, cowardly features. He wore a suit of buckskin profusely adorned with a fringe of the same material. "Bully" was written in his unattractive face and was shown in his every moment.

The conductor of the train, a very courteous and efficient man, rather small of stature, named Bender, some time after leaving Dodge City, came through the car, collecting fares. Bender had some nasal trouble, which made it appear when he spoke that he was talking through his nose. He drew out his words very slowly, and altogether his utterances were rather droll. He approached the Dodge City bully and asked for his ticket.

"Got no ticket," he said, surlily.

"Where are you going?" drawled Bender.

"Goin' where I please, and it's none of your business where I'm goin'," replied the bully.

"You've got to pay your fare or get off this train; and I want to know how far you're going," again demanded Bender.

"I tell you I'm not tellin' you or any one else where I'm goin'!" replied the bully, at the same time placing his right hand on one of the two revolvers of large caliber conspicuously displayed in his belt.

The bully during the colloquy had emphasized his words with the coarsest profanity. The other passengers in the car became a little excited, and were evidently curious to see what the end would be.

When the bully thus threateningly gave his ultimatum Bender eyed him coolly for a moment in silence, then passed on, collecting his fares. In perhaps a half-hour Bender came into the car from the direction of the express-car, with a double-barrelled shotgun, cocked, and before the bully had time to offer any show of defence, Bender had him covered, the muzzle of the gun being within two feet of the bully's face.

"Now where are you going?" said Bender, coolly drawing out the question through the nose.

"I'm goin' to get off," replied the thoroughly cowed bully.

A brakeman pulled the bell-cord and the train came to a halt. Bender, keeping his man covered, with the cocked gun, followed him until he saw him jump from the steps of the car into the darkness, at least twenty miles from the nearest station. Then the train moved on and the passengers settled into a normal quiet.

Keep Your Memory Busy.

Memory does not "fail"—except in loss of all the faculties: simply gets weak and languid for want of use—just as the physical organs do.

People often say, "My memory is failing," when it is really as good as ever, if they would give it a chance. A word, a date, a name, an incident comes up—or, rather, fails to come up—when you want it. There seems to be no possible way of remembering it. You make two or three efforts, give it up, and say: "There's no use; it's gone from me." Nonsense! It hasn't. It is there just as much as it ever was, only there are a lot of things over it. Keep at work; bring your will to bear upon it; try and try, and, after a while you can get it, says The Philadelphia Enquirer.

And, better, you will find that the exercise required in remembering it will help you next time, and that a little toil and determination put together will accomplish wonders in the whole range of the faculties. Look over your memory; see where you are most deficient, and exercise it in that respect. You can do it at any odd time—while you are walking, riding, resting after a day's work, or listening, perforce, to a dull speaker. Don't let a few failures discourage you. The long corridors of recollection, lined upon both sides with valuable material, will be opened for you, because of your importunity, if you use it.

Carrying Coals to Newcastle.

When the woman who loves flowers went to California to spend the winter, she insisted on taking along her pet calla, says the Troy Times. "I never thought so much of a plant as I do of that calla," she replied to her husband's objections. "It will be full of blossoms this winter, and I wouldn't miss seeing them and smelling them for anything."

So she and the calla started. How they fared is told in these paragraphs from her first letter home:

"As to that calla, it was the greatest bother. I almost went myself to a shadow taking care of it. By the time I got into California I was sick and tired of it. But I remembered the comfort the blossoms would be when they came.

"When I got up on the morning of the last day I looked out of the car window, and may I never see home again if the train wasn't running through a field of callas so big that I couldn't see its limits! I just sat down and had a good cry!

"To think that an ordinarily sensible woman should cart a twenty-pound pot and lily more than three thousand miles just because she wanted to see it in bloom, and then find millions of the same lilies growing wild! It was enough to make an angel weep! I just took that calla and threw it out of the car window!"

"Thinking" Oneself to Death.

Thousands of people actually think themselves to death every year by allowing their mind to dwell on morbid subjects. As a rule, the thought that kills relates to something the individual dreads more than anything else in the world. There is the germ of fatal thought in ninety-nine persons in every hundred, and the exception is only proof against the thought disease by having been inoculated with the lymph of profound optimism or philosophy. The idea that one has some incipient disease in one's system, the thought of financial ruin, that one is getting on in life without improving prospects—any of them, or a thousand similar thoughts, may carry a healthy man to a premature grave. A melancholy thought that fixes itself upon one's mind needs as much "doctoring" as physical disease; it needs to be eradicated from the mind, or it will have just the same result as a neglected disease would have. The thought-disease sometimes cures itself after running its course; so does smallpox. But who would settle down to suffer from smallpox and chance recovery, as thousands of foolish persons settle down to let the thought-disease, which has attacked them, do its worst? Every melancholy thought, every morbid notion, and every nagging worry should be resisted to the utmost, and the patient should be physicked by cheerful thoughts, of which here is a store in everyone's possession, bright companions—cheaper than drugs, and pleasanter.

You may mend a broken reputation, but your neighbors will keep their eyes on the crack.

A Gully Conscience.

"Second thief, best owner," says an old proverb, and an experience reported in the Milwaukee Sentinel suggests that the saying may have been inspired by an umbrella. A Grand Avenue merchant found that he had no umbrella one day when a sudden rain came on. He worried along the avenue and across the bridge, debating whether to buy one. He was deterred by the thought that he already had three kicking around somewhere.

"When I got over on East Water Street," he says, "I spied Dick, an old friend of mine. He was carrying a fine silk umbrella. That wasn't what I thought about, though. I was overjoyed to meet him. But just for the joke of it I rushed up behind and slapped him hard on the back and cried:

"Look here, old man, give me that umbrella!"

"The man turned, and to my surprise I discovered that it was not Dick, but someone I had never seen before. I was covered with confusion and just making ready to apologize, when I noticed that the stranger seemed even more confused than I. He hastily closed the umbrella and pushed it into my hand.

"I—I beg your pardon," he said. "I didn't know it was yours," and he vanished around the corner.

"Seems as though he must have stolen it," the merchant added, meditatively. "But I came by it honestly, didn't I?"

In one of the great Eastern colleges recently a sophomore noticed that two country boys on the ground floor of a college hall had a tiny room, with a miserable apology for a bed, two rude chairs, no table, no carpet. They proposed to board themselves, doubtless on starvation rations. They expected hazing, and they were not disappointed. One night a sophomore ordered them to a distant room, where for an hour they were quizzed by a roomful of masked men. When they were allowed to return to their room, they stood dumb before a new carpet, an iron bedstead comfortably furnished, a table, drop lamp, easy chairs and a half-filled bookcase; and in the closet were provisions enough for a week. Hazing of this sort is not excessively common, but no fundamental objection to it is offered.

Dated this twenty-ninth day of May, A. D., 1902.

JAMES H. BAIRD, Mortgagee.

"Beautiful, beautiful silken hair!" Philip murmured fondly, toying lovingly with one of her nut-brown tresses; "soft as the plumage of an angel's wing; light as the thistle-down that dances on the summer air; the shimmer of sunset, one glitter of yellow gold; the rich, red brown of autumnal forests blending in entrancing beauty in its—"

And just then it came off in his hands, and he forgot what it was next.

ALFONDLY 0149.

Alfondly is a very handsome bay stallion, standing 16 hands high and weighing 1150 pounds. He was bred by L. H. Smith, of Arcanum, Ohio, in 1892. Alfondly has the kindest of dispositions, and in addition to his speed, he has characteristics which render him a particularly valuable "all-round" horse. No one could wish a more nearly perfect driving horse than Alfondly. His gait is the poetry of motion, and he is faster than any other horse for scores of miles around. He is also a great campaigner, and as an illustration of his powers in this direction, we may cite a few instances from his work as a three-year-old. In his first race, on May 28, before fairly in condition, he came out second in 2:20. Out of the next eight races in which he took part, he won seven, six in straight heats, and in the other took the first heat, and was then drawn on account of an accident. On August 2, at Middletown, Indiana, he went up against a field of twelve competing horses. There he distanced, or caused to be drawn, five of the number, and won the race in straight heats, as usual. His crowning glory was his performance at Richmond, Indiana, on September 12, 1895, where he again carried all before him, lowering his record to the remarkable figure of 2:12. All these races took place over ordinary half-mile tracks. He has trailed a half-mile track in 2:07, which comes very near being as fast as any horse in the world ever paced such a track. In a six-year-old form he started ten times winning five firsts and never behind the money but once, and that was for not getting a beat in five, but he was second to Ada P. who got her mark of 2:09 in that race. Alfondly's sire was Petoskey, by George Wilkes, the world's most famous sire, with 23 in the 2:30 list. Alfondly is a double cross Blue Bull with 64 in the list. He will stand at the owner's stable, Centreville, from Friday noon to Wednesday noon, and will be at Woodstock at Gallagher Bros. stable every Thursday. Terms—to warrant $15. $2.00 to be paid at time of service. For further information write or telephone the owner.
