

To the Weary Dyspeptic,
We Ask This Question:

Why don't you remove that weight at the pit of the Stomach?

Why don't you regulate that variable appetite, and condition the digestive organs so that it will not be necessary to starve the stomach to avoid distress after eating?

The first step is to regulate the bowels.
For this purpose

THE MAKING OF A MULTI-MILLIONAIRE.

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan, the "Napoleon of Finance."

There is an irresistible fascination in the personality and career of a man who in these days of colossal fortunes is described as the "king of the multi-millionaires" and as the man "who wields more power than any monarch in the world."

And that there is not a grain of exaggeration in these descriptions, extravagant as they may appear, is recognised by all who have followed the amazing career of Mr. J.
P. Morgan.

Picture a large, massive man with the burly shoulders of a pugilist, a large head crowned by a high, fine forehead, on which the iron-grey hair is growing thin, a square-cut, resolute chin, a close-cropped grey moustache which fails to hide lips that close like a steel trap, a remarkably large nose, and eyes the small pupils of which gleam like rapier points under bushy, projecting eyebrows.

This is a man who a generation ago tried a round with Jay Gould and vanquished him; who plays with millions as boys with copper coins; who is the supreme controller of the coal mines and railways of the United States, and of the steel industry of the world; and is now surely gathering into his hands the reins of the world's shipping.

He has long ago left Mr. J. D. Rockefeller, until then the undisputed king of financiers, far behind in the contest for supremacy. He now controls six times as much capital and a dozen times as many men as the Standard Oil magnate, and every year he is adding new kingdoms to his empire.

In the railway world alone Mr. Morgan is supreme master of a mileage almost as great as that of all the railways of Great Britain and Ireland, employing more men than there are sailors in our Navy, earning £36,000,000 a year in gross profits, and owning land of an area greater than that of Ireland with Yorkshire thrown in.

It is only fair to say that when Mr. Morgan came into the world sixty-nine years ago it was under very favourable auspices, as the son of Mr. Junius Spencer Morgan, millionaire and philanthropist. He had the best of education in Boston and Germany, and an exceptional business training under his father's direction in the houses of Dalmey, Morgan, and Co., and Drexel, Morgan, and Co. And such was the supreme skill and masterfulness of this young "Napoleon of finance" that he quickly started a career which, for daring and success, is absolutely unique.

Mr. Morgan is at once the most formidable and approachable of men. There are few men who can face the steely, penetrating look of his eyes without quailing. "When he looks at me," a railroad president once said, "I feel as though my flesh and bones were transparent, and that my very soul were laid bare to his eyes." These eyes of Mr. Morgan seem to be a vital factor in his success. It is commonly said in New York that if he wants to buy a railway he sends for the president, transfixes him with that X-ray glance of his, and the president at once succumbs and leaves Mr. Morgan to fix the price.

This may be an exaggeration; but there is no doubt that there is an irresistible forceful-ness in Mr. Morgan which makes even great millionaires and presidents mere puppets in his hands. And yet he is so accessible that anyone who has business with him can walk straight into his office at the corner of Broad and Wall Streets and secure an interview without even the formality of being announced. A keen, searching glance at the caller, a few—very few—cut words, and he is dismissed almost before he realizes that the interview has begun; and this, although the fate of a million dollars may have been decided.

Apart from his business life Mr. Morgan is a delightful man, with a keen capacity for enjoying the best of life. He is a man of wide culture, well read in the literature of Germany, France, and Italy, as well as of his own tongue, and a great art-lover, who thinks as little of paying £30,000 for a coveted painting as a thousand guineas for a rare volume.

He is a lover of England and all things English, as is evidenced by the fact that he has two homes here; one a plain, sedatelooking house in Prince's Gate, the other a country seat, hidden away in its forty acres of ground at quiet Rehampton. Both houses are perfect museums of costly treasures, all chosen with a rare taste and skill.

His happiest days, perhaps, are spent on his yacht, Corsair, for this man of many millions has an absorbing passion for the sea; and often when he finds himself overwhelmed with work he will take it all on board his yacht, steam away to sea, and only return to land when, in his words "the slate is wiped clean."

His only other passion is for dogs; and to see the great man at his best, says an intimate friend, "you should see him caressing and playing with his favorite collies." He is, too, among the men "who do good by stealth and blush to find it fame"—only "blush" is scarcely the word—for if by chance any of his many charities are betrayed, his anger, it is said, is a thing to make the most obdurate offender tremble.

Such, in brief, is the world's greatest financier, a man of iron resolution and of supreme skill and daring; and yet, withal, a man of large heart, simple tastes, a cultured mind, and a rare capacity for extracting from life its maximum of profit and pleasure.—

Lives Well on Ten Acres.

A good friend of ours, the owner of only ten acres of good land, lives as happily and comfortably on the products of this little farm as any man on a much larger place. He keeps a pair of brood mares, which raise him two good draft colts every year, barring accidents; he keeps two good cows, three or four pigs, about seventy-five hens and a few stands of bees; he keeps about two acres of small fruit—strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, currants, gooseberries—grows three or four acres of potatoes each year, an acre of broom corn which he manufactures into brooms in the winter, an acre of onions, and the rest of his land in corn. He raises very large crops, for he ploughs deep, fertilizes his land heavily and takes good care of all crops while growing. He has in addition a plum orchard and a big asparagus bed which both bring in quite a nice little sum each year. He told us that he lived well and saved a little money each year, and yet there are lots of men who really believe that they cannot live on less than 160 acres.—Ex-

HOW TO SAVE LIFE.

Simplified Method for the Restoration of Drowning Persons.

The following simplified method for the restoration of drowning persons, and of those who have lost consciousness through asphyxia or any other cause, was developed by Dr. J.
V. Laborde of the School of Anthropology in Paris. It has proved efficacious in many cases. In one cited, of a child who had been submerged for nearly fifteen minutes, the return of breathing was accomplished in ten minutes. The translation here given is from a leaflet which Dr. Laborde distributes among his pupils, and its publication is believed to be timely:

1. As soon as the drowning man has been taken from the water, force open his mouth.
If the teeth are clinched, separate them with the fingers, or by means of any hard object—e. g., a piece of wood, the end of a cane, the handle of a knife, a spoon or a fork.

2. Firmly seize between the thumb and the first finger of the right hand the end of the tongue, using your handkerchief or any piece of linen, to prevent the tongue from slipping; then repeatedly, rhythmically, and with decision, pull it from the mouth, and relax it alternately—at the rate of at least twenty times a minute, imitating the cadence movement of expiration and inspiration.

3. At the same time introduce, far back into the throat, the first finger of the left hand, pressing upon the base of the tongue, so as to induce vomiting, and thus free the stomach of the water or food which encum-bers it.

4. This treatment, the most efficacious known method of bringing back the respiration, must be begun without slightest delay, and persistently continued for a half-hour, an hour, or more. At the same time all the usual remedies must be applied. Most important are the removal of the clothes, friction over the whole body, pressure upon the interior part of the chest, the restoration of the bodily heat, and, where it is possible, the application upon the region of the heart of compresses of very hot water.

The same method may and should be applied, in the same manner, in all cases of asphyxia and of syncope (loss of consciousness), from whatever cause.
