Did Duty For All.

Some years ago a foreign diplomat, who shall be nameless, presented his letters of recall to a certain King, who invited him to a farewell banquet at the palace, presented him during the course of the evening with a superb golden cigar-case, studded with costly jewels, a memento of his sojourn at the Court and of His Majesty's appreciation of the services he had rendered.

On the day following the presentation a note arrived from the Grand Master of the King's Household, begging that the case might be returned for some slight alteration—something or other was to be inscribed on the interior of the case. Of course, the diplomat sent it.

A few days elapsed, and then the diplomat ventured to inquire how the alterations were progressing and when he might expect a return of the case, as he was in a hurry to leave the country and to get home.

A polite reply was forwarded that the alterations would be completed in a day or two. At considerable inconvenience the diplomat tarried a week, preferring to wait to entrust the costly gift to a shipping agent to deliver to him in England. A fortnight elapsed, three weeks, and then, in despair, after wasting much stationery and ink, the wearied diplomatist set sail, leaving his address behind him. From that day to this the cigar-case has never turned up.

Recently, however, he met his successor, who, in his turn, had just left the Court. The latter was full of enthusiasm about the King, who, he exclaimed, "is a capital fellow. He presented me with a splendid gold cigar-case, heavily encrusted with magnificent gems, when I took my leave of him. I would like to show it to you, only they asked to have it back for a bit to make an alteration of some sort."

The smile that developed on the features of the other diplomat became very broad, and investigation brought to light the fact that yet other diplomats had been treated in the same manner; that is to say, presumably the identical gold cigar-case had done duty for them all.

A Surprising Discovery.

You will be surprised in trying Catarrhozone to find how quickly it cures cold in the head. The agreeable, penetrating vapor traverses every air cell and passage of the nose, throat and lungs. In one breath it carries instant death to the millions of germs infesting the respiratory organs and breaks up a cold in ten minutes.

A trial will convince you that Catarrhozone is the most potent, satisfactory and pleasant cure for Colds, Catarrh, Deafness, Bronchitis, Asthma and Lung Trouble. Complete outfit, $1.00; small size 25c. Druggists or N. C. Polson Co., Kingston, Ont.

HAMILTON'S MANDRAKE PILLS CURE BILLIOUSNESS.

Verbeck of Japan.

For nearly forty years Guido Fridolin Verbeck gave his life to christianizing Japan. After he left home this great Dutchman was a "Citizen of No Country," as his biographer, Rev. W. E. Griffins, calls him. He left Holland as a young man, and came to the United States, where he remained too short a time to become naturalized. Then he went to the island empire where no foreigner is ever made a citizen.

He had been licensed and ordained a Presbyterian clergyman before he joined the party of missionaries which sailed in 1859 for the land where today there stands a monument erected to him by the Japanese people. When he arrived he found himself in a country where the open preaching of any new religion was forbidden. Young Verbeck had, therefore, to possess his soul in patience. But there was waiting for him an ally—one who had hoped for the coming of a teacher of Christianity.

Years before, when the Crimean War had stirred up not only the West but the East, Japan had set about to protect her harbors. In charge of the coast and harbor guard was Murata Wakasa no Kami (Murata, Lord of Wakasa), who performed his duty by making from time to time personal inspections of the defenses.

On one of these excursions he found floating in the water a little book, different in type, binding and language from anything he had ever seen. He was curious to know what it was, and found, after much wary and quiet inquiry, an interpreter who could translate it to him. This interpreter told him that the book was about the Creator of the Universe and about Jesus, who did the will and taught the truths of that Creator; and that there was much between its leaves about morals and religion.

All this merely whetted Wakasa's eagerness to know everything that the book contained, and he sent one of his men to Nagasaki, ostensibly to study medicine, but really to learn from the Dutch settlers more about the book. They told him much, especially that the volume had been translated into Chinese. That simplified the matter. He sent a man to China and got a copy, and began to study the New Testament for himself.

In a little while he started a Bible class, and began to teach in his own poor way the new religion he had found. In need of more instruction, he sent his brother to Nagasaki, where he found Mr. Verbeck. The two brothers became Verbeck's pupils. Thus Christianity was planted in the heart of a man of power, and began to grow.

But for a long time the struggle was against great odds. When the imperial government heard of Wakasa's conversion, it commanded the prince to punish him. The order was not obeyed, and the new faith, although technically forbidden by the law, gradually ceased to meet active opposition. Modern Japan, energetic, progressive, civilized, was in part built by the homeless Dutchman who made a home for himself in the land which has become part of his title—Verbeck of Japan.

When Life is not Life

"Without health life is not life: it is only a state of languor and suffering—an image of death." The use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food gives the weak, languid and discouraged a new hold on life. It makes the blood pure and rich, creates new nerve force and instills new energy and vitality into the whole being. It makes weak and sickly people strong and well by building up the system.

Making Expenses.

When Edward Payson Hammond, the great revivalist, passed through Illinois in the late sixties he did not neglect Galesburg; he felt that Galesburg generally needed him, and Ox Horns Marshall needed him in particular.

A crown of glory awaited any revivalist who could win to the heavenly way John Marshall, the Galesburg tailor, whose store sign was a pair of huge, wide-curved horns, arching above his door. No one in Galesburg who knew of Marshall and his record put any faith in the old saw that it takes nine tailors to make a man. It was generally conceded that Ox-Horns Marshall, when he was properly loaded and carefully aimed in the direction of serious trouble, could attend to any nine men of the vicinity, near or remote. The ox-horns, which were his crudely improvised heraldic device, were acknowledged to be no more than justly typical of his strength and of his prowess in such bickerings as the Illinois of that clamorous day provided.

With Hammond, religion came to Galesburg. And, as it came to Galesburg with its wrath and its repentance, it came to Ox-Horns Marshall.

He reformed. Galesburg dazed at first, and last accepted the wonder of his reformation; but he hastened its evening meal in order to go to church and gaze with awe upon this child of evil from whom the blackness had been washed out. The glory of his amendment spread in undiminished radiance from town to town, and traveling salesmen—roystering friends of his in the unregenerate days—attended the revival meetings in order to see Ox-Horns Marshall bow that terrifying front of his in earnest, humbly prayer.

There were four of them in the rear of the sacred edifice, one night, when the reformed one felt the time had come for him to play a Christian's active part. He walked forward, seized the plate, and began to take up the collection. He did not see his friends of sin until he came directly to their pew; he was suffering from the stage fright which seizes every man to whom that solemn plate is first introduced with all its stern responsibilities. Their presence took him by surprise. But his courage rose with the emergency.

"Chip in, boys!" he whispered hoarsely. "Salvation's free. But oh, dear friends, remember, it costs like hell to run a Methodist church!"—Lippincott's Magazine for August.

The Centenary of Trousers.

Speaking of the centenary of trousers, "Fashion," an English journal, explains that they "came in" on account of the high living prevalent a hundred years ago. This produced a good deal of gout, whose twinges the tight-fitting costume in use at that period made unbearable. Hence the invention of the wider form of garment which soon became popular. Among the "dandies" of the period, however, the new style was regarded with contempt, and when Almack's was at its height as a fashionable resort the great Duke of Wellington himself was once refused admission because he presented himself in trousers instead of the (for that time) orthodox nether garments. A tragedy is associated with the discarding of the knee-breeches in Paris. A tradesman in the city took the sartorial innovation very much to heart. He foresaw that his occupation would soon be gone. Dreading a penurious old age, he ended his earthly troubles by drowning himself in the Seine. The poor fellow possessed at the period of the advent of the trousers one of the most prosperous businesses in his particular line in France. He was a maker of false calves for the legs of the nobility and gentry!

Drawing the Line.

A well-known judge on a Virginia circuit was reminded very forcibly, says Harper's Magazine, of his increasing baldness.

One of his rural friends looked at him and drawled. "It won't be so very long judge, 'fo' you'll hev to tie a string round your head to tell how fer up to wash yer face."

Nothing Remarkable.

Biggs—I once knew a man who had been married ten years and didn't know that his wife had false teeth.

Boggs—That is strange. "Not at all; she didn't have them."

"Why weepst thou, woman?" "My lord will be buried this day."

"My wife was buried yesterday. Tomorrow I must get me another." Whereupon the woman shook the ashes from her shining hair, dried her eyes, and, looking into the face of the widower, smiled. "I will be at home tomorrow, all day," she said.—August Smart Set.
