Popping the Question.

From Health.
An American minister recently surprised his hearers by advising the women of his congregation not to wait for the men, but to "pop the question themselves." And a woman writing on the subject says, Why not? It is," she continues, "a sad commentary on inconsistency of men that they should continually hold up the career of wife and mother before women as the one prize for which womanhood should aspire and then carefully bar them out of the race." In the old days when woman had to be supported, it was manners for her to wait till she was asked by the man. Now, however, when any able-bodied and fairly intelligent girl can support a husband in the style to which his father has accustomed him, there is no good reason why a woman should not take an active hand in love-making, instead of merely sitting at home and looking willing. There is great hardship in the old custom which has condemned woman to wait and take what is offered her instead of taking an active hand in getting what she wants. "Many a woman," says the candid friend above referred to, "is an old maid because she did not have the liberty of suggesting to some purling bachelor that she would make him a good wife. Then, again, a woman is always about ten times as much married as a man, so it is more important for a wife to be pleased than the husband, so why should not she have the monopoly of choosing?" Women, all the world over, will watch the result of the St. Louis minister's advice with much interest. And yet, will any woman want to marry the man who lacked the courage to ask her?

For a Certainty I am Cured

Mr. James Trenuman, butcher, 536 Adelaide Street, London, Ont., writes that for two years he was laid up with kidney disease and urinary troubles. He became dropsical and his legs would swell so that he could scarcely go round. He never used any medicine that did him so much good as Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and knows for a certainty that this treatment cured him. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box.

The Pull of the Girl.

A small white thread on the coat of a passenger on an east-bound train was the innocent cause of much embarrassment for two young women a few days ago.

Sitting in front of the two girls in the car was a nice-looking young man who wore a light-colored knit jersey beneath his coat. When the girls sat down they noticed a small white raveling on the young man's coat collar.

"I have a notion to pick that thread off the man's coat," said one of the girls, "because I don't think he knows it's there."

"Oh, let it go," replied her friend, "he'll brush it off before long."

The train rolled on, the white thread remained on the collar and the longer the girls looked at it the more nervous they got.

"I'm going to pick it off," said the first girl, "no matter what happens," and she caught hold of the string. She gave it a slight jerk, and instead of coming off more string pulled out from in under his coat.

She pulled and pulled, but still the end of the string did not come, so she decided to break it off and slowly tucked the short end under the man's collar so it would not show.

Both girls were crimson with blushes by this time and several other passengers in the car were watching the outcome with much interest.

"Pull it once more," whispered the second girl, "and see if the end won't come."

Her friend did so, but instead of more string coming the thread snapped off near her fingers, and flew forward around the young man's neck.

This was more than he could stand, and, turning round, he said:

"I beg your pardon, ladies, but you are unraveling my sweater."

20 Years of Itching Piles

Mr. Alex. McLaughlin, Bowmanville, Ont., writes that for twenty years he suffered terribly from itching piles. Seven years ago he asked a druggist for the best cure for piles and was told to use Dr. Chase's Ointment. He continued this treatment until entirely cured, and as he has never had any return of his old trouble considers his cure permanent and remarkable on account of the length of time he suffered.

A Queer Old Frenchman.

(Harper's Weekly.)
An aged Frenchman in threadbare clothes, not only of the fashion but of the actual production of the year 1860, dodged all his countrymen through many years in Rome. A few of these knew that his name was Auguste Dutuit, and he was known to be so desperately stingy that the opinion gained currency that he was rich. Through an old woman servant some prying people also ascertained that the old man was starving himself to death for the want of decent food that he could well enough afford to buy. But it took him a long time to complete the process; he was ninety years old when at least he gave up the ghost—and he had lived in Rome very much in this way, seeing generations of his curious countrymen come and go for sixty years! When at last he did die the fact came out that he was a multi-millionaire—in francs—and had bequeathed to the city of Paris, his native city, a collection of pictures, medals, prints, manuscripts, bibelots, books and other things valued at three millions of francs. And he had given not only these things, but money enough to install them, and property enough to take care of them and provide them with a curator and custodian; and also large bequests to the city of Rouen, where his parents came from, and to Marseilles, where he made most of his money. All these unsuspected years he had been spending at Rome, to amass his collections and saving, saving, in order that he might spend more largely. He provides in his will that the museum which he bestows on Paris shall be freely accessible to all the people. Therefore, all Paris rings now with the name of Auguste Dutuit, of whom it never heard before. But Paris wonders at a temperament which led a man to live thus scorned, despised, as a miserable self-torturing fool, for the sixty years that he sequestered himself together to add to its instruction and pleasure.

Fear of the Future

Most people who dread the future are victims of some terrible disease. Mrs. W. Francis, 204 Colborne St., Kingston, was in a bad state with kidney disease. She had severe pains in back and legs, was gradually losing flesh and felt a dread of the future. A friend recommended Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and the result was a complete cure. There is no medicine more reliable, none so certain to produce a thorough cure. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box.

Can a Drunken Man Be Malicious?

Because he was intoxicated and did not know what he was doing, thereby making it impossible for the police to prove malicious intent, James McDonald was discharged by Special Justice Cutler in the Police Court at Chelsea yesterday morning, after having been arraigned on a charge of maliciously breaking glass in the building numbered 462 Eastern-avenue, Chelsea. McDonald said he had been in a liquor store at 2 o'clock on the afternoon the window was broken; that he had been drinking and was thrown out during a fight. In summing up the case, the court read a definition of the word malicious, and then said that a drunken man is for some crimes as responsible as a sober man, but that there are certain specific charges that may not be proved against him. If a drunken man breaks a pane of glass when he is in such a condition that he does not know what he is doing, or can harbor no malice, he then becomes civilly liable for the damage, but cannot be punished criminally for the offence. When the proprietor considered McDonald too drunk to be served it was shown, the court said, that the defendant was in an irresponsible condition.

The Coming of a Marquis.

When Lord Salisbury succeeded on his father's death to the marquise the Lords were not in haste to welcome him, tho the House of Commons had parted with him with such regret that, according to a Radical journalist of the time, "if it had been proposed to bury the new marquis in the family vault of the Cecils, or to banish him to some desert island, he could hardly have been more openly or generally mourned over." The Times spoke of Lord Cranborne when he left the Commons, as "industrious, pugnacious, vigorous and eloquent"; but an impression from the Gilded Chamber was that "he is downright dictatorial, and, truth to say, he treats his peers with something akin to contempt." But the new peer was soon too busy attacking measures to spend much time attacking men, as in his first speech in the Lords, on the same subject as his last speech in the Commons, he pledged himself to the interesting utterance that "when the opinion of your countrymen has declared itself, and you see that their convictions—their firm, deliberate, sustained convictions—are in favor of any course, I do not for a moment deny that it is your business to yield." A generation comes between that first speech and the last which Lord Salisbury delivered in the Lords last month, and the peers came to know their leader as something more than "dictatorial."

Irritating Pimples and Disfiguring Blisters.

They place many young girls at a great disadvantage in life. The only cure is a blood purifier like Ferrozone. It cleanses the crimson flood of poisons and impurities, renews and strengthens it, and makes lots of red corpuscles that manifest their presence by a ruddy, healthy glow in the cheeks and lips. Ferrozone quickly masters all skin eruptions, builds up broken down constitutions, and gives to weak, sickly women an abundance of spirits, vitality, energy and beauty. Try Ferrozone, it's all right. Price 50c. per box, or 6 boxes for $2.50, at druggists, or N. C. Polson & Co., Kingston, Ont. —Sold by Garden Bros.

Dyspepsia and Heart Trouble

Mr. George Webber, St. George Street, Chatham, Ont., states:—"I was very nervous, troubled some with my heart and suffered a great deal from nervous dyspepsia and indigestion. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has proven a thorough cure in my case. After having used it for some time I am pleased to say that I am entirely restored to health. The indigestion does not trouble me, my nerves are strong and vigorous and the action of my heart is regular."

Dyspepsia and heart trouble frequently go hand in hand. When the blood is thin and watery and the nerves are weak and exhausted, every organ in the body is liable to get slow and uncertain in action. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is the most powerful blood-builder and nerve restorative that medical science has ever devised. It cures thoroughly and permanently by restoring the whole system to health and vigor. 50 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Toronto.
