Mr. Schwab's Career.

Of all the men in the public eye today none has been a more shining example of sudden rise to wealth and eminence than Charles M.
Schwab.

Little more than twenty years were required to convert the stake driver earning one dollar a day in the engineering department of the Carnegie Steel Company, into the capitalist who could play chess with millionnaire pawns, and into a pathetic example of the futility of mere achievement.

Born at Williamsburg, Pa., Feb. 18, 1862, Schwab graduated at sixteen from a Catholic brothers' school and at once began work as a grocer's assistant in Braddock for $2.50 a week and his board. He became fascinated with the operation of the steel works near at hand. Every evening found earnest-looking, dark-eyed boy peering at the great furnaces, talking with the workmen between 'spells.'

It was only natural that when Capt. Jones, one of Carnegie's superintendents, strolled into the grocery store, young Schwab should wrest from him the promise of a position in the Homestead works. Not much of a position, truly—to drive stakes with the engineering corps—but to Schwab it was the entering wedge.

One of Schwab's oft-quoted maxims for success is: 'Make yourself indispensable to your employer, instead of constantly looking at the clock.'

Schwab lived his maxim first and wrote it afterward. So well did he succeed that in seven years he was Carnegie's chief engineer.

His quick rise was due to his thorough mastery of both the theory and practice of steel construction.

Schwab became a chemist, and as soon as his work at the plant was finished toiled late into the night in a private laboratory at his own house. He constructed an elevated road in the Braddock yards, and with Jones perfected an invention known as a 'metal mixer' which revolutionized the manufacture of steel.

When, in 1887, he was made superintendent of the Homestead mills, he began the making of armor plate for the government.

One day in 1890 Carnegie heard by accident that Schwab, now his manager, had received an offer of an annual salary of fifty thousand dollars from an English firm.

To the Weary Dyspeptic, We Ask This Question:

Why don't you remove that weight at the pit of the Stomach?

Why don't you regulate that variable appetite, and condition the digestive organs so that it will not be necessary to starve the stomach to avoid distress after eating?

The first step is to regulate the bowels.
For this purpose

Burdock Blood Bitters Has No Equal.

It acts promptly and effectually and permanently cures all derangements of digestion.

'Don't you do it,' said Carnegie. 'What will you take instead?'

'Partnership interest,' Schwab answered.

So it came to pass that when, in 1901 Schwab at Carnegie's instigation, was made president of the famous billion-dollar steel trust, he was the holder of $18,929,000 in the Carnegie company.

Schwab was married at twenty-one. His wife is a tall, fine-looking woman, with good taste in dress and a fad for the collection of miniatures. It is said that while her husband was increasing his knowledge of steel construction she was busy making use of the opportunities for cultivation that her husband's money gave her.

The spectre of steel—steel—steel, of money —money—money, has pursued Schwab everywhere. He tried golf as a relaxation, but he could not play for the love of the game, as Carnegie; he must wager $1,000 a hole. He went abroad on a pleasure trip, and the Continent rang with tales of his gambling ventures.—Chicago 'Post.'

Murderer Fled 31,000 Miles but was run Down.

There have been many long pursuits of criminals, great in the distance travelled, the obstacles overcome and the persistence of pursuing officers, but that of Sergeant Wood of the Natal, South Africa, police is doubtless a record-breaker. The man sought by Sergeant Wood was charged with embezzling large sums of money at Pietermaritzburg. He got away from South Africa and went to New York. Although the detective had information as to where his quarry was hiding, yet he had first to visit London to obtain the necessary extradition papers. Then he hurried to America, and, with the assistance of the United States police, ran down his man. By the time he had reached Maritzburg, he had been travelling hard for nearly three months, and had covered nearly 31,000 miles.

One of the sternest chases of recent years was after Loys Darrell, formerly sergeant in the 7th United States Cavalry. Darrell enlisted at the beginning of the Spanish-American war and distinguished himself in Cuba.
There he fell in love with a pretty Spanish girl, and beggared himself in buying finery for his sweetheart. To obtain more money he robbed and murdered a companion-in-arms named Crouch. He then fled.

A detective named Dupuy was put upon the murderer's track, and, finding a clue, started for New Orleans. He was right in his surmise that Darrell had gone there, but when he arrived the bird had flown. He had left on a British mule transport for South Africa. Dupuy took train for New York, fast boat for Southampton, rushed by rail across Europe, caught a boat of the German East African line, and, finally arrived at Beira, in Portuguese, East Africa.

There he waited like a spider for a fly, and, just as Darrell was fancying himself safe from pursuit he pounced upon him. Later on the detective deposited his prisoner safely in Castle William Jail, New York. He had travelled, in all, 31,000 miles, and spent $4,250 in the chase.

One of the most astonishing criminals England ever produced was a man named Benson, who began operations in London with two confederates. He organized a series of swindling companies in the city, while he himself, pretending to be an invalid, lived in the greatest luxury in the Isle of Wight. He posed as a great philanthropist, was foremost in charitable works, and went into the very best society. By dint of bribing certain officers of the law, he lived for some years on the proceeds of his swindles. But one day the crash came. He was arrested, sentenced and got a long term in Portsmouth Jail.

No sooner was he out than he was at his old tricks again. These culminated in Switzerland, where he managed to gain the affections of the daughter of an English officer. Through her he induced her father to trust him with the investment of his entire capital, some $35,000. He bolted with the money. Chased across Europe, a detective caught him at Bremen. To avoid scandal, the victim promised not to prosecute if Benson would give up the money. The latter did so and left for America. Hardly was the vessel out of sight before it was discovered that the bundle of scrip the thief had handed over was worth at most $160.

Followed across the Atlantic, Benson escaped to Mexico, where he made £5000 by passing himself off as Mme. Patti's agent and selling forged concert tickets. By this time his photograph was in almost every police bureau in the world. Yet he dodged and twisted, under a dozen aliases, and was heard of in almost every South American state before a clever detective ran him down in Rio after a two years' hunt.

Even then he cheated justice. Landed in prison in New York, he walked upstairs, chatting amiably to his jailer. Suddenly he made a spring and jumped clean over the banister. He was picked up with a broken back and died that night.

The police never exhibit more relentless energy than, in hunting down a coiner. A coiner's crime is against government, and so the whole forces of the state are against him.
The United States suffers far more from coin-ers than England does, and is proportionately keen to run down such offenders. Early in 1900 a man named Hastings was surprised in his workshop, from which he had issued many thousands of small silver coins, but he was too quick for his would-be captors and escaped. No fewer than seven secret service men were put on his track. The remarkable fact is that Hastings never attempted to leave the States.

Ellfer, one of the detectives, got a hint that a stranger was in the woods. He took a blanket and some food and hid himself in a thicket. Very early in the morning Hastings passed, carrying a bag of food. Ellfer track-ed him to his refuge, and saw that the forger was armed. He waited some distance away in hiding. When night came, Hastings came out with a dark lantern and searched every bush near his hiding place. At last he was satisfied, and went back. As soon as Ellfer felt sure the man was asleep he crept up and had the handcuffs on him before he could awake. On the way to the jail Hastings told his captor that he had seen him on ten different occasions, and had once, in Cincinnati, been within three feet of him in a theatre.

'Obhouse Would Get it.

Professor Edwin Ray Lankester was sitting in his office in the Natural History Museum, London, when he was visited by an elderly woman, evidently from the country, who carried a parcel, which she handled with the most exaggerated care. She was in a state of great excitement, and exclaimed:

'I've got two of 'em.'

'Two of what?' inquired the professor.

'Two 'awks' eggs,' replied the woman.

'I'm told they're worth a thousand pounds apiece.'

The professor, much interested, looked at the eggs. 'These are not 'awks' eggs' he said.

'They are 'awks' eggs,' said his visitor.

'My son Joe found 'em.'

A light dawned on the naturalist. 'The kind of eggs which are so valuable,' he remarked gently, 'are the eggs of an extinct bird called the auk—a-u-k.'

'Oh, hawk,' said the woman. 'I'll pay out that 'Eury 'Obhouse as told me it was 'awks' eggs as was wanted.'

And she went away.
