ONE sees on the streets now an occasional gentleman, dressed in the picturesque garb of a stream driver, carrying under his arm a set of long boots, the soles fairly bristling with shiny new calks. SOME of the game wardens report that a large number of moose and deer were slaughtered in the rear of New Denmark last winter. Warden George Price discovered the carcasses of eight moose which were killed in their yards where the deep snow rendered their escape impossible. Only a little steak had been removed from a few of the moose, and since the animals had not been destroyed for food there could have been no sport in illegally shooting animals which had no chance of escape from butchery. Suspicion attaches to several persons, but the wardens possess no evidence that would justify arrests. The government should employ and pay wardens to patrol the big game territory during the whole winter.
