A CHOICE OF EVILS.

"After all," he said, when she had consented with the calmness of despair, "is it such a terrible thing that I ask? You simply marry Claud instead of Spencer, and the minute after the register is signed this document passes into your possession.

The wedding was fixed to take place in a month's time, and Spencer set about putting the affairs of the dead financier in order. Having an intimate knowledge of how matters stood, he was able to settle things with much advantage to himself, and when the insurance companies had discharged their liabilities he found himself with a very comfortable balance at his bankers.

When the wedding-day came round it found the bridegroom in a very cheerful frame of mind. The event had been announced in several society papers, the service was to be fully choral, and no expense had been spared.

The church was crowded, and a hum of admiration filled the edifice as Mona Carew passed up the aisle on the arm of her father and joined Spencer Twemlow before the altar.

The ceremony had proceeded but a very little way, however, when there was a stir in the church, and a woman, with a dirty shawl thrown over a tousled head and lines of dissipation marked on her face, forced her way to the altar and confronted Twemlow.

"I forbid this marriage!"

In an instant all was commotion. The minister closed his book and requested the attendance of all parties concerned in the vestry.

Twemlow followed, with wonder on his face. The woman was a stranger to him.

"Now, madam, may I learn the reason of your objection?"

"That man is my husband!"

"What nonsense!" exclaimed Twemlow.

"I never saw you before in my life."

"What? Do you deny your own wife, Claude Twemlow, the mother of your five children whom you deserted in Australia? Are you Claude Twemlow or are you not?"

"Yes, yes, of course; certainly."

"Then here's my marriage certificate. Nine years ago this very week we were married. A good wife I have been to you, and this is how I'm treated. Shame on you, Claude, and this poor young lady here—"

The minister took the document, and as he was perusing it the woman edged closer to Twemlow and whispered in his ear:—

"Hook it as fast as you can. The police are on their way here now. It is about that Garling affair. Hook it quickly."

But at that moment the door opened and three men were added to the party.

"Lawrence! Lawrence!"

Sobbing with joy Mona threw herself into her lover's arms, and two detectives approached Twemlow.

"Claude Twemlow, you are our prisoner."

"On what charge?"

"Robbery and attempted murder of Mr. Lawrence Garling, and I have to warn you that anything you say now may be used in evidence against you at your trial."

"But—but this is preposterous. I—I am not Claude Twemlow."

"That won't do for us. If you are not Claude Twemlow, who are you?"

In a moment he saw his mistake, but it was too late to rectify it.

"I—I am—his brother, Spencer."

"Spencer Twemlow is dead and buried."

"No, it is not so. Claude died in my house I dressed him in my clothes and let him take my place."

For a moment all were dumfounded, but a detective seized his wrists and quickly fastened a pair of handcuffs upon them.

"Claude Twemlow or Spencer Twemlow, I am justified, I think, in taking you prisoner. You both seem to have been a pair of scoundrels, and if you are Spencer I imagine that certain insurance companies will be glad to have a word with you."

Without more ado they removed their man, and Mona and Lawrence, now happily reunited, drove back to Mr. Carew's house.

Mona Carew is now Mrs. Lawrence Garling, the happiest wife to be found in England, and as Mr. Spencer Twemlow sits in his lonely cell he will have ample time during the next five years to rue the unlucky day when he was called upon to make a "choice of evils."

A delicate variation of the somewhat coarse dish, beefsteak and onions, is achieved by rolling three or four chopped onions in a beefsteak, tying securely and leaving the beefsteak over night in the icebox. Remove the onions and broil, turning frequently. The onions may be fried separately, if desired and served as a side dish to those who like them.

One of the metallic trade problems or mysteries discussed by The Engineering and Mining Journal is the absorption of silver by India and China, which is shared to some extent by other eastern countries. Ever since Europe began to trade with the east it has been taking all the silver it could get; and at the present time India and China take approximately one-half of the silver which the world produces yearly. It is true that silver is the money of those countries; but the people are poor, their daily transactions are on a very small scale, and the amount of money required for circulation is very much less, in proportion to population, than in the United States or Europe. The east does not export silver; it keeps what it gets. All sorts of theories have been advanced by all sorts of economists. None of them has satisfactory explained what has become of the silver or where are the great accumulations, which undoubtedly exist, but which cannot be drawn out even by famine.

"Commercial Intelligence," a London weekly of recognized standing, calls for "a truce to vague talk" in this impatient manner:—"Surely no one seriously contends that to enact a trumpery 1 shilling duty on corn and then to remit it in favor of Canada would bind our Empire together, for there are many other parts of the empire besides Canada and few of them export corn in any quantity. Having benefited Canada to a trifling extent, and at our own cost, what part of the Empire shall we next consider? Shall we raise the price of mutton to benefit New Zealand, or the price of wool to benefit Australia? Let us have it made plain how we are to proceed."

BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEYS.

Symptoms That Warn You of the Approach of This Malady so
Dreadfully Painful and Fatal in its Results.

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

Bright's disease is in reality a chronic inflammation of the kidneys, and is the natural consequence of neglecting ordinary kidney derangements.

At first you may notice a slight swelling of the feet after the day's work is over, slow but unmistakable failure of health, pallor of face, and loss of flesh, shortness of breath when going upstairs rapidly, and dimness of sight.

Soon the digestive system becomes deranged, the appetite impaired, and in many there is a tendency to diarrhoea and formation of gas in the intestines. There are frequently recurring headaches, attacks of dizziness, and severe pains in the back and limbs.

The accumulation of watery fluid—dropsy—continues in the cavity of the chest, and may at any time cause death from heart failure or dropsy of the lungs. Sometimes uraemia, stupor, convulsions and death occur suddenly, before the other symptoms have become prominent, and while the dropsy is still slight in quantity.

As Bright's disease causes a wasting away of the cells and tissues of the Kidneys themselves, as well as of the whole body, it can only be perfectly cured if treatment is begun in its early stages, when its first symptoms become noticeable. Because of their remarkably prompt and direct action on the kidneys, Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills have time and again proven their superiority as a preventative and cure for Bright's disease.

Mr. W. Stafford, tailor, 88 Brussels Street, St. John, N. B., states:—"I suffered a great deal from pains in the small of my back, caused from kidney disease. I presume my work (tailoring) aggravated the trouble. I could get no relief until I used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and they have entirely cured me."

"I have always used Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine for coughs and colds and I do not think there is a better remedy known than this. It seems to go directly to the diseased parts and at once brings relief. I have such faith in both these preparations that we always keep them in the house."

While toning and invigorating the kidneys, and making them active in removing uric acid from the blood, Dr. Chase's Kidney Liver Pills also regulate the action of the liver and the bowels, and encourage the digestive organs to properly perform their duties. Their use will quickly stop the dreadful wasting process, which accompanies Bright's disease, and restore the deranged organs to health and activity. One pill a dose, 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmondson, Bates and Co., Toronto.

Which Leg?

In a small town in the West of Scotland the town-clerk, who was a bit of a "character" had this misfortune to lose his leg in a railway accident.

As a mark of appreciation and esteem for his long services, the council unanimously agreed to replace his loss with an artificial limb, which they did as soon as he was sufficiently recovered.

A few months afterwards the town-clerk, who was generally known by his Christian name, Paul, was unfortunate enough to have his other leg fractured in a trap accident. Naturally the mishap became food for town gossip, and one old wife, in discussing the matter with a neighbour, was overheard saying:—

"It's a gay bad business for Paul, poor man; but isn't his ain leg or the leg that belongs to the toon that's broken?"

Mrs. Twank: "Do you know, the burglars didn't touch our family plate!"

Mrs. Blank: "They must have been experts."

THE WOODSTOCK RANGE.

The Methodist Parsonage, Jacksonville, Carleton Co., N. B., Oct. 11th, 1902

Messrs. Small & Fisher, Woodstock:

Gentlemen,—After upwards of thirty years experience with a large variety of cook stoves, none has ever given the satisfaction derived from your "Woodstock". It is a perfect heater and baker, keeps the water tank hot day and night, with less fuel than any stove we have ever had in our parsonages.

Yours faithfully,

JOHN C. BERRIE.

P. S.—I kept the fire going night and day from the 1st of October to the end of March with less than five cords of hardwood.—J.C.B.

The Ah Goo People.

The Ah Goo People don't touch the ground, These singular folks are carried around And a single phrase is the only sound They ever give utterance to.

The slaves all hurry whenever they hear A kindly Ah Goo drawing near— And its partly love—and its partly fear— That they'll burst their skins clear through.

For whenever an Ah Goo Person thinks It's time for food and it's time for drinks, He gives a yell and he turns to pinks And several kinds of a blue.

The Ah Goo live in every town, They're red, and yellow, and black, and brown, And white, and their password, with a frown, Is the single phrase, Ah Goo.

I was an Ah Goo once they say But I grew so tall that I couldn't stay, And so I was forced to come away— And so—and so were you.

The Ah Goo People all live rent free In the Happy Land of the Jamboree In a single room called a Nurserie— And every word is true!

Tomatoes Grown on Potato Vines.

N. Y. Post: Professor Green, of the Minnesota State School of Agriculture has, by a process of grafting, grown fully developed, tomatoes on a potato vine. He cut off the young shoots of a potato vine, making a V-shaped slit in the top, into which he inserted a freshly clipped young tomato plant and bound the joint with straw, and supported it by long rods. Nature did the rest; the tomato drew its sustenance from the earth through the roots of the potato, and in return furnished what was required in the way of the action of light and air upon its own leaves to its adopted roots. Professor Green's sole object was to show what could be done in the way of grafting widely separated plants. The work is a proof of skill in the graftman, but it shows the extent to which nature will act to repair a wound. It shows also that the action of the stalks is not dependent wholly upon the action within its own particular variety. The plant is now nearly five months old, and several tomatoes have ripened upon it, and fairly developed potatoes have grown in the ground. There are no leaves suggestive of the potato on the plant, which is three feet high.

Agent: "This is the best protection in the world. The burglar no sooner enters the house than it gives up the alarm."

Mr. Harris: "Haven't you one that will alarm the burglar?"
