A postmaster in a small country town recently exercised his ingenuity, and found vent for his humour at the same time, by posting up a new set of rules in his office. They were:—

Ink bottles may be corked when sent by post.
It is unsafe to post apple or fruit trees with the fruit on them.

As all postmasters are expert linguists, the addresses may be written in Chinese or Hebrew.

Persons are not compelled to lick their own postage stamps and envelopes; the postmaster will do this for them.

Persons are earnestly requested not to send post-cards with money-orders attached, as large sums are lost in that way.

It is particularly requested that lovers writing to each other will please confine their gushing rhapsodies to the inside of the envelope.

Nitro-glycerine must be forwarded at the risk of the sender. If it should blow up in the postmaster's hand, he cannot be held responsible.

When watches are sent through the post the sender should put a notice on the outside—the postmasters will then wind and keep them in going order.

When sending a money-order in a letter, always write full and explicit directions in the same communication, so that any person getting the letter can draw the money.

When letters are received bearing no direction, the persons for whom they are intended will please signify the fact to the postmaster, that they may be at once forwarded.

Embarrassing.
A tall, solemn-looking young man entered a restaurant with a mild, apologetic air, and seated himself at a vacant table near the middle of the room. It was evident that he dreaded to intrude. He wanted to get as far away from other people as possible. He even blushed painfully when he gave his order, and the most casual observer could have told that he was bashful.

Just as his dinner was brought to him a buxom-looking woman, with seven small children, entered the place.

The head-waiter swept the field with his eye, pounced down upon the table where the young man had sought solitude, motioned to the mother, who clucked to the chickens, and a moment later they were all around that one table. The young man's face was a serial story.

Other people entered the restaurant, glanced at the group, smiled significantly, and seated themselves.

"He doesn't look it, does he?" queried a pleasant-faced old lady, in an audible whisper.

"She looks at least ten years older than he," murmured a girl at the next table.

He flew to the hat-rack, tossed half a crown to the young lady at the desk, and tried to go through the door without opening it.

Value of Hardwood Timber.
While coniferous woods comprise the bulk of the forest wealth of Canada, there is a large quantity of hardwood timber which represents an asset of no small value. The tendency in the past has been to overlook the importance of the hardwood, but the time has come when the question of preserving this class of forest must receive attention.

Notwithstanding that iron and steel have replaced wood in the construction of buildings and for many other purposes, the demand for hardwood lumber is gradually increasing, and today the factories using such as their raw material are finding difficulty in obtaining an adequate supply. The furniture factories are now in the happy position of being compelled to take their travelling salesmen off the road on account of having more orders than can be filled. The consumption of hardwood lumber by this industry alone is very heavy. With the consequent increased price of lumber has come an appreciation in the value of stumpage.

The action of certain railroads in the Northern States may have an important bearing upon the hardwood demand. It appears that many of these roads have experienced great difficulty in obtaining longleaf pine ties from the Southern States and have appealed to the Bureau of Forestry for assistance. The Director of the Bureau has suggested the use of beech, maple and birch instead of pine, these to be seasoned and preserved just as beech is seasoned in France. The Great Eastern Railroad of France is said to have succeeded in preserving beech ties for 35 years by impregnating them with tar oils. Should it be found practical to preserve hardwood timber in this manner even for a shorter period than is done in France, the railroads have expressed their intention of acquiring large areas of timber lands on which they will grow their own trees, cut their own ties, and thus be assured of a steady supply.

Other new uses for hardwood timber will doubtless be discovered as time goes by, and our advice to owners of hardwood stumpage is to preserve it, and before many years it is likely to be much more valuable than it is today.—The Canada Lumberman.

His Animal Progress.

"In babyhood his mother called him 'a kitten'; the neighbors, 'a little monkey.'

When at college he was commonly dubbed 'a calf'; the girls sometimes termed him 'a puppy.'

After he left college he became, according to his friends, 'a gay dog;' according to his enemies, 'a beast.'

In business he was referred to as 'a sly fox;' though his competitors labeled him 'a wolf.'

In Wall street he was 'a bull'—sometimes 'a bear.'

In his love affairs he was 'a perfect tiger;' some said, however, 'a perfect donkey!'

In society he was described as 'a lion,' varied occasionally by 'an ass!'"—Town Topics.

When George Ade went from the literary field of Le Fayette, Ind., to the staff of the Chicago "Record" he met a lady waiter who wasn't as young as she used to be, but was quite as pretty as she had ever been, and her devotion to Mr. Ade was pathetic. He was a good thing at first, valuntarily, because he wanted to help struggling genius, but the lady was so persistent that she became a nuisance. One day he went cheerfully to his desk, for he had not seen her in a long, long time, and the hope that she had gone to a better world above made him resigned, if not really happy. But it was not to be. He found her waiting for him. She greeted him effusively, and he didn't reciprocate, but he had to be polite and ask her where she had been all this time. "Why, don't you know?" she said. "I had a fever for three weeks, and it had taken me six weeks to get on my feet." "Six weeks?" exclaimed Mr. Ade in surprise. "Yes, indeed; six whole weeks." "Well," he responded, as if thoroughly convinced, "I have always heard that Chicago women had large feet, but I didn't suppose they were quite so large as that."

Soon after J. M. Barrie leaped into fame, the editors of three London journals for which he had done a good deal of work determined to give a dinner in his honor. Mr. Barrie accepted the invitation, and in due course the three knights of the pen and scissors and their distinguished guest sat down together. The hosts, knowing their contributor only by his work, fully anticipated a "feast of reason and a flow of soul." However, the soup and fish were consumed without a word from Mr. Barrie, or at least, with nothing beyond noncommittal grunts. Despite frantic efforts to lure him into conversation, it was not until he rose to put on his coat that he made his first and last remark that he uttered during the evening: "Well, this is the first time I've ever had dinner with three editors."

"BUG DEATH" kills Potatoes, Squash and Cucumber Bugs, Currant, Gooseberry, Tomato Canker Worms, and all bugs and worms that eat the leaves of plants. It keeps the vines green and growing from ten days to three weeks longer, which gives it many more growing days at the time the plant needs it. Potatoes mature better, are more starchy and less liable to rot; and "Bug Death" kills the bugs.
