

A Poor Man's University.

No one who heard the elegant and scholarly address in which Secretary Hay welcomed the members of the International Peace Congress, or who read the oration in print, can have failed to notice how freely the speaker drew upon the Scriptures for illustration or warning or metaphor, or other telling effect. The nature of the Scriptural references was such as to make it plain to every cultivated hearer that the Secretary of State is a reader of the Bible and familiar with it.

When Senator Hoar died the newspapers from one end of the country to the other commented on his broad and deep scholarship, yet there was no way in which that scholar, ship so frequently exhibited itself in his speeches as in the aptness and force with which he quoted Scripture. His great speech on the Philippine policy was a notable illustration.

President Lincoln had the same gift, or acquirement, and used it in the same way; nor can one find many Americans who have been great in the highest sense of the word of whom the same could not be said, in a greater or less degree.

Is it not rather strange that familiarity with the Scriptures always produces upon an audience the impression of learning, of cultivation? Does the fact not give young men something to consider? That impression is produced by reason of the fact that a thorough knowledge of the Bible is culture, is learning. Mr. Hay is in every sense a learned man, and so was Senator Hoar; and if to minds like theirs familiar with the best literature of the world, the precepts and imagery of the Bible are the first to come and the longest to linger, it is because they summarize and sublimate all knowledge and all experience. The Bible is the poor man's greatest university, for it is absolutely free, and it fulfils the highest ideal of education—character and knowledge together.

To Enliven the Liver

AID DIGESTION AND REGULATE THE ACTION OF THE BOWELS YOU MUST USE

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS.

THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR LIVER AND KIDNEY DISEASES.

It is the liver that is largely responsible for indigestion and constipation—derangements that are a constant source of trouble.

The bile, which when left in the blood, is a poison to the system, causing biliousness, headache and muddy complexion, becomes of priceless value when passed into the intestines to aid digestion and ensure regular action of the bowels.

The healthy liver separates bile from the blood and sends it into the intestines.

If You Find Your Liver Sluggish and Torpid in Action Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will Bring Relief and Cure More Promptly Than any Treatment You Could Find.

By enlivening the action of the liver they remove the cause of biliousness, headache, indigestion, constipation and other accompanying symptoms.

This specific action of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills on the liver is what makes them of so great worth as a family medicine and ensures them a lasting place in the home.

MR. ROGERS CLANCY, farmer, Chesham, Bruce County, Ont., writes:—"I have used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and would say that there is no medicine that equals them as a cure for stomach troubles, biliousness, torpid liver and headache. I was troubled a great deal with these ailments before using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and they have proven wonderfully successful in my case."

One pill a dose at bedtime and Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will ensure healthful, regular action of kidneys, liver and bowels; 25 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmanston, Bates & Co., Toronto. The portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

The First Real Lady.

It is remarkable how much we may know about remote personages.

Eve lived a long time ago. And yet today it is possible to speak of her characteristics with authority.

We know, for example, that Eve was fickle. The fact that she was not surrounded by a lot of admirers was not her fault. Men were just as scarce at the first summer resort as they are today. But with the one she had Eve did the best she could. In spite of the Darwinian theory, she made a monkey of him.

And the only trouble with Adam was that, when he fell, he didn't land on both feet.

We know also that Eve was unselfish. When she came across the first nice red apple she didn't hide behind a fig tree and eat it all herself and then come out and say, "Here, old man, is the core." But with rare generosity she gave it to Adam first. She believed when there was any new fruit around in trying it on the dog. "Take it, Adam," she said, "and if it gives you appendicitis, grip, pains in the back, a hacking cough, and makes a crank, a liar and a profligate out of you, I won't go back on you. I'll eat the other half, and stand by you to the bitter end, even if the price of necessities is doubled and I have to run you in debt to keep myself respectable."

That was one of the great things about this kind, first lady of the garden. She didn't let her old side-partner meet the consequences alone, but she stood in with him to the bitter end. "As long as you're booked to go down in the express elevator to the basement floor, I'll go with you," she said, "and break your fall."

And Eve did it. She not only broke his fall, but he also, patient and willing sufferer that he is, has been broke ever since.

Looking back on Eve, as we can through the still lapse of dressmakers' bills and the long vista of spring openings that stretch the other way through the golden past, we know now that she hated and despised clothes.

"Give me," said Eve, "a little of the long green; say an acre or so; that is all I ask to cover me from the biting drafts of the opera and the sharp, keen air of the ballroom. Give me a few old feathers, gathered by some chesty Nimrod, in remote quarters of the earth, that don't cost more than one hundred dollars an ounce, and I can worry along. All I ask is a few thousand dollars' worth of little things for my head and feet and hands and siren form, to last me for the next two weeks until I make out a list of the real necessities, and I can manage somehow."

The Art of "Mothering."

"How's your mother, Carrie?" asked a friend of a twelve-year-old city girl whose mother was a well-known worker in various organizations for social betterment.

"I haven't seen mother for ten days," replied Carrie. "She isn't up when I go to school, and she doesn't come home till after I'm in bed at night; but I guess she's all right."

Evidently there is something wrong in that household. Miss McCracken, in her recent article on "The Woman on the Farm" puts her finger on the evil. She points out an important advantage which the country child has over the city child. School may not be so long or so good in the country, and opportunities for books and music and pictures may be few and far between. But mothers in the country are mothers indeed.

"You see," says the little girl from the farm, "I've seen my mother almost the whole time ever since I was born. I almost always could do everything that she did and go everywhere she went. It was so unusual when I couldn't that I always heard afterward every word about what happened. Now my cousin—who lives in the city—doesn't do that way with her mother. They couldn't! Her mother goes to too many places and does too many things that—she says—aren't for children, and it takes her so much time to tell about them, even if her daughter wanted to hear, which she doesn't much."

There is the problem sharply stated. Its solution is not so easy; but it is certain that there is no public service which a woman can render so vitally important to the future of the race as just this very "mothering." Only in the sort of love which penetrates the whole life of the family, and sound and loyal, can be found the remedy for the social and domestic unrest which is more dangerous to our country than foreign fleets or political dissensions.

Cooks to The Great.

Although there are nearly fifty persons employed in the British royal kitchen, beginning with a Faench chef whose salary is well over four figures a year in pounds sterling, King Edward himself, says London Answers, seems to profit little by their skill. A thin soup, such as julienne, some sort of white fish, and a delicate dish composed of chicken or other bird, form one of his majesty's typical meals. It is to his guests that most of the dainty dishes go.

Despite all that is said about the German Emperor's Spartan habits, there are few monarchs who keep more elaborate tables. He has four chefs, of different nationalities, and in addition there is an individual who may be described as "sausage-maker to the Kaiser."

His majesty is very fond of the huge white Frankfurter sausages, and has a supply of them made fresh every day in his own kitchen. When engaged in maneuvering his army on a big field-day these Frankfurters and bread invariably form the Kaiser's lunch.

The chef to the Tsar of Russia leads a dog's life, it is said, thanks to the monarch's habit of ordering special dishes to be prepared, and then refusing them and demanding something else. "Elk, in ten fashions," was one of his extraordinary orders—countermanded in favor of black game after the menu was put before him.

King Carlos of Portugal is the stoutest of European monarchs. This may be due to his love of English foods. Nothing delights him so much as simple roast joints and poultry,

If It Shrinks.

There's only one guarantee worth considering when it comes to Underwear. That's the guarantee that goes with every garment bearing the Stanfield label—"money back if it shrinks." That is the way we prove our faith in try, with plain gravies and sauces. When he is dining alone his evening meal frequently consists of a few oysters, a portion of a porter-house steak, and a little Gruyere cheese.

Macaroni may be described as the staple food of King George of Greece. He insists upon having it on the table and partaking of it at every meal, in some form or other, and he alone of European monarchs employs a "macaroni chef," an Italian, who is not only expert at preparing the food in every possible way, but also at building it into all kinds of shapes.

The young King of Spain is extremely partial to goat's flesh. As he couples with this a strong liking for the garlic beloved of his countrymen, his chef's ingenuity is frequently taxed to provide something new in the way of dishes. Goose stuffed with chestnuts is another favorite of Alfonso.

The Scandinavian monarchs are simple in their choice of foods, and their cooks have easy times. The King of Sweden and Norway, in particular, is partial to cold meats and fish. Herrings with tomatoes are a favorite mixture of his, and reindeer flesh, which is a popular food in the country, always finds a place on the royal table.

Cobwigger—What became of that women's club that was organized to purify politics? Dorcas—they had an election officers, and most of the members were suspended for stuffing the ballotbox.

This is the only satisfactory Sulky Plow that has ever been introduced on the St. John River.

It does better work and hauls quite as easy as any handle plow. Works equally well on rough or stony land.

The proof that it is a satisfactory plow lies in the fact that we sold upwards of a hundred of them last season and the demand is steadily increasing.

We will nearly double these figures next year.

We supply them in both single and double.

Sold only by us and our agents. Beware of Imitations.

Messrs. Small & Fisher, Woodstock:

Gentlemen,—After upwards of thirty years experience with a large variety of cook stoves, none has ever given the satisfaction derived from your "Woodstock". It is a perfect heater and baker, keeps the water tank hot day and night, with less fuel than any stove we have ever had in our parsonages.

Yours faithfully,

JOHN C. BERRIE.
