Absolutely Unshrinkable
Stanfield's Underwear can't shrink. We've seen to that for you. Every fibre of the wool is tested for strength. Then we take the shrink out of it. After the wool is woven, we again try to shrink it. And when the Underwear is completely finished, the third trial for shrinkage is made. Every garment goes through the same process.

Rushlights.

In these days of gas, electricity, cheap matches and kerosene, one can hardly realize the troubles and difficulties in the way of procuring and maintaining artificial light a hundred years ago. Until well into the fourth decade of the nineteenth century, says Miss Jekyll in "Old Surrey," many families could afford nothing better than the rushlights that they made at home.

In the summer, when the common rushes of marshy ground were at their full growth, they were collected by women and children. The rush is of very simple structure, white pith inside and a tough green skin on the outside. The rushes were peeled, all but a narrow strip, which was left to strengthen the pith, and were hung up in bunches to dry.

Fat of any kind was collected, though fat from salted meat was avoided, if possible. It was melted in boat shaped grease-pans that stood on their three short legs in the hot ashes in front of the fire. They were of cast iron, made on purpose. The bunches, each of about a dozen peeled rushes, were drawn through the grease and then put aside to dry.

An old cottage friend told me all about it, and though winter was just over, and the rushes barely grown, and she ninety years of age, yet when next I went to see her she had gone out and found some rushes to show me how it was done.

"You peel away the rind from the peth, leaving only a little strip of rind. And when the rushes are dry you dips 'em through the grease, keeping 'em well under. And my mother she always laid hers to dry in a bit of hollow bark. Mutton fat's the best; it dries hardest."

A rushlight fifteen inches long would burn about half an hour. The frequent shifting was the work of a child. It was a greasy job not suited to the fingers of the mother at her needlework. "Mend the light," or "Mend the rush," was the signal for the child to put up a new length.

Writer and Pugilist.

Marshall P. Walder, the diminutive humorist, who is about three feet tall, was talking with James J. Corbett former champion pugilist, on a Broadway corner the other day when a New Yorker passed with a friend from the provinces, to whom he was showing the sights. "See those two men?" he said, indicating the wit and the fighter. "They are Marshall P. Wilder and 'Jim' Corbett." "Is that so?" said the man from the interior, gazing with rapt interest at the curiously contrasted figures of the famous men. Then, after a moment's pause. "Say, which is Corbett?"

The Christmas Delineator.

The December Delineator, with its message of good cheer and helpfulness, will be welcomed in every home. The fashion pages are unusually attractive, illustrating and describing the very latest modes in a way to make their construction during the busy, festive season a pleasure instead of a task, and the literary and pictorial features are of rare excellence. A selection of Love Songs from the Wagner Operas, rendered into English by Richard de Gallienne and beautifully illustrated in colors by J. C. Leyendecker occupies a prominent place, and a chapter in the Composers' Series, relating the Romance of Wagner and Cosima, is an interesting supplement to the lyrics. A very clever paper entitled "The Court Circles of the Republic," described some unique phases of Washington social life in an unnamed contributor, who is said to write from the inner circles of society. There are short stories from the pens of F. Hopkinson Smith, Robert Grant, Alice Brown, Mary Stewart

Cutting and Elmore Elliott Peake, and such interesting writers as Julia Magruder, L. Frank Baum, and Grace MacGowan Cooke hold the attention of the children. Many Christmas suggestions are given in needlework and Cookery pages are redolent of the Christmas feast. In addition, there are the regular departments of the magazine, with many special articles on topics relating to woman's interests within and without the home.

A Bridge of Hose.

The firemen of Engine Number Twelve were sitting in chairs round the door of the engine-house. Old Henry Carr, who was driver on hook ladder, coughed and cleared his throat. "I guess it was before your time," said he, looking from one to the other of his associates, "when the King Block burned. I had a pretty close call then, and managed to get out of a bad scrape in a curious way. I was hoseman of Engine Two in those days. It was before the time of water-towers, and we used to have to do some tall climbing on the ladders.

"King Block was the highest building in town. When we got to the fire it had already swept up through the elevator shaft, and the second and third stories were all going. Our crew had orders from the chief to take a hose up the fourth story on ladders, and Jim Nolan was with me at the nozzle.

"We went up the extension ladder, broke in one of the office windows, and met the flames on the stairway. There was one or two hot-air explosions below, but we stuck to the job until all of a sudden something fell in, and let the draft up the stairway. We knew we were beaten, and that there wasn't much time left for us to retreat down the ladder.

"Jim got to the window first and looked out. 'It's all up with us, Henry,' he says to me. 'The fire has come out of the windows below, and our ladder is burnt in two.' 'We knew very well that our comrades, who were shouting at us below, had nothing long enough or quick enough to reach us in time.

"The fire was eating along the hallway, and it looked like jump or burn.

"Henry," shouts Jim, 'wind the hose around that iron safe! The hose will save us. We'll go down on the hose!'

"The flames were bursting out below, and already the cotton casing on the hose was smoking. No man could ever slide down alive.

"Jim," said I, 'it can't be done. We'd scorch to a cinder on the way.'

"He leaned out the window and made signs to the men below. Meanwhile I did as he had told me, and made the hose fast. When I went to the window beside him, he had made the men understand him by his shouts and signs.

"Watch!" he said to me. 'I saw the men below unbuckle the other end of the hose, and run across with it to a ladder they were putting up against the opposite building. They took it up about two stories, and made it fast somewhere inside the window.'

"Then I saw the whole thing. The hose was hanging between the two buildings like a bridge, and of course it was pulled away out from the flames that were shooting out below us. We just slid down the hose to the place where the slack part hung over the middle of the street, and the boys in the building opposite kept paying it out until the sag reached the ground. You ought to have heard the folks shout when we got to the street."

Danger in Shooting Big Game.

Outing: The disturbing element in hunting elephant or seladang or rhino has been always to me at least, the feeling of uncertainty as to whether or not I could stop the animal if I wounded it and it charged me, as it did on an average of once in three times.

Based on my experience, therefore, I should place the elephant first and the rhino third after the seladang, which is fully as formidable as the Cape buffalo, and is mis-called the bison all over India. Each of these animals is dangerous on different and individual grounds; the elephant, though less likely to charge than any of the others, is terrifying because of his enormous strength which stops at no obstacle, and the extreme difficulty of reaching a vital spot, especially if, with trunk tightly coiled, he is coming your way.

I know of no sensation more awesome than standing ankle deep in clinging mud in dense cover, with the jungle crashing around you as though the entire forest was toppling, as the elephant you have wounded comes smashing his way in your direction. The seladang is dangerous, partly because of the thick jungle he seeks when wounded, but more especially because of his tremendous vitality and his usual, though not invariable, habit of awaiting the hunter on his tracks and charging suddenly, swiftly, and viciously. It requires close and hard shooting to bring down one of these six-foot specimens of Oriental cattle.

The danger of the tiger and of the lion is in their lightning activity and ferocious strength; but you have the shoulder in addition to the head shot, if broadside; or if coming on, the chest, all sure to stop if well placed. The reason the rhino is so formidable is because its vulnerable spots are so hard to reach. Its brain is as small in proportion as that of the elephant, and may be reached through the eye if head on, or about three inches below and just in front of or just behind the base of the ear, according to your position for a shot.
