THE Woodstock Field Battery broke up camp on Friday July 1st. The men were instructed in semaphore signalling by Sgt. Instructor Gimblett, and they did good work at it. They were highly complimented for their general efficiency by Lieut. Col. Ogilvie who conducted the inspection. On the last day in camp the men made up a purse of $30.00 for Sgt. Gimblett in appreciation of his work as instructor. There has never been a more orderly lot of men in camp here since the organization of the Battery.

Safe on the Cinder-Path,
There are parts of Kentucky where some mountaineers have never seen a locomotive. One of these mountaineers who drifted into civilization encountered a railroad train, and took to flight down the track.

The engineer stopped the train and captured what he supposed was a crazy man. Finding him sane but breathless, the engineer in anger asked him why he did not get off the track.

"Get off the track!" roared the mountaineer. "If I'd ever took to plowed land the thing would have caught me for sure."

"A lazy man," said Uncle Eben, "is li'ble to git mo' overheated dodgin' work dan he would be if he went ahead an' 'tended to business."—(Washington Star.
