Vegetable Butter.

Vegetable as well as animal oil may be used successfully in making substitutes for butter. Legislation against artificial butter is as unreasonable as laws against substitutes for bread or candy; but while the farmer must bear the burden of protection, all the favors given him merely lessen the balance still due. This must not be confounded with cacao butter, which, though sounding very similar to cocoa butter, is nevertheless prepared from an entirely different nut and used for quite other purposes. Of all the vegetable oils, that extracted from the cocoanut is the one of which the composition approaches most nearly to the butter made from milk. Like true butter, it contains seven per cent. of soluble acids, which are not found in such considerable proportion in any other fat. Cocoa butter also contains from twenty-five to thirty times less water than true butter. It will keep fifteen or twenty days without showing any acid reaction and from this fact seems to offer a real superiority over animal butter for use in making dry pastry, biscuits and confectionery. Under the name of "copra" the meat of the cocoanut goes to European countries and is there employed in the manufacture of oil, the residuum, in the form of a press cake, being fed to cattle for fattening. According to a French publication, it is in France that this cocoanut oil is subject to special treatment, from which it emerges to become the formidable rival of butter made from cow's milk. A German chemist of prominence, Dr. Heuner, proposes to buy up all the cocoanut oils and to transform them into a succulent, savory, inodorous product, to which he proposes to give the name "vegetable butter."

The nut produces sixty per cent. of oil, which has heretofore had no industrial use other than furnishing the fats for soap, or oil for lubrication of machinery, the better sorts being employed in the preparation of textiles. The process advocated by Dr. Heuner has already been successfully tried. By it cocoa butter can be produced much cheaper than butter from cream. As the product contains little or no water less of it would be required by weight, and, owing to its slowness of oxidizing, confectioners and bakers would find it to their advantage to use it for cakes, pies, and other things in their lines, because they would not get stale and unmarketable so quickly. From the standpoint of hygiene, The Scientific American declares that butter made from milk occupies the first rank among substances which are most favorable to the culture of microbes and of the worst ferments, while cocoa butter, on the contrary, seems to be an antiseptic medium very improperly qualified for the dissemination and propagation of bacteria. In this respect comparative experiments made upon both of these substances have given results which do not admit of doubt as to which is the better antiseptic. Experiments upon the artificial digestion of this form of butter, carried out in the Central Hospital of Vienna, have given equally gratifying results, and have been confirmed later by other experiments in the different hospitals of Switzerland. But even if a satisfactory vegetable butter should be produced, the preference for the output of the dairy will long be a dominating influence in the market.

Schoolboy Honor.

A lesson in the evils of talebearing and how an English school-master regarded it, is conveyed by Irving Montagu, the war artist, in reminiscence of his schooldays. Talebearing, or 'preaching,' is considered among boys the most dishonorable of offences, and young Montagu was duly impressed by the fact, as the story goes on to show.

The fellows were absent; they had gone to Bradley's farm, out of bounds, and were caught red-handed in the possession of illicit stores by 'the doctor.' Seven were intercepted at the cross-roads, laden with supplies; they were interrogated as to the names of the other three, and with the sneaking hope of lightening their own punishments at once gave them up.

The other three were Tom Bersford, Nipper Watkins and your humble servant, better known in those days as Peg Montagu.

Then came the query to the trembling three. 'Who were the other seven?'

We fondly hoped that they had escaped, looked first at one another, then at the doctor no one spoke.

Threats followed, but we stood to our guns, and returned to the school still in custody.

WOODSTOCK, N. B., JULY 27, 1904.

The great bell was rung at an unwanted hour, and the silence was painful as the portentous step of the doctor was heard approaching. Mounting his rostrum, he called out:

'Bersford, Watking, Montagu, stand out! Do you still refuse to give up the names of those boys who were with you out of bounds?'

'Yes, sir,' in a sort of loud whisper.

'Very well,' I give you five minutes to decide.'

And then came the most fearful five minutes we had ever experienced. At the end the doctor said:

'Will you give up those names? (an awful pause). 'or do you absolutely refuse to do so?'

'We felt as if about to place a fuse at a given moment to a barrel of gunpowder, as we replied. 'We refuse to give them up, sir.'

'Very well said the doctor in a voice of thunder, 'since that is the case there is only one course to follow. Come up here each one of you, and let men (another awful pause) 'shake you by the hand and congratulate you on having held on as you have done, in spite of prospective penalties, as a matter of school-boy honor. I congratulate you, I say, on having refused to give up the names of those other fellows, who to save themselves, were only too ready to give up yours.'

How those rafters rung again, as the dear old doctor gave us that never-to-be forgotten lesson. When the excitement had somewhat subsided, he concluded by addressing the remaining seven:

'I have no punishment to give you, except it be expressing hope that you may not be so ready on a further occasion to screen yourselves at the expense of others.'

Betrayed by Gas Bills.

The master of the house was looking over the family accounts.

'Um,' he muttered presently to attract the attention of his wife. 'Eliza and that young man of hers must be rapidly reaching a point where we may expect an announcement from them.'

'Dear me!' exclaimed his spouse, in an ecstatic tremor, 'what makes you think so?'

'Just listen to these gas bills,' he replied, 'February, $4.33; March, $4.87; April, $7.42; May, $3.65.'

'That is still Greek to me,' said the wife.

'Nonsense!' said the man. 'Can't you see that during the first two months he was calling on her our gas bills remained normal. In the third month there was a great rise, showing that he was late in leaving, and this month there has been a decrease in the expense, because they have reached the point where they turn the light low whenever they sit in the parlor.'

And that very night the prophetic acumen of the father was justified.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, the venerable author of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," who received the degree of LL. D. recently, listened philosophically the other day to the complaints of a woman whose son's education at Harvard was costing a great deal of money.

"Many sons' educations cost a great deal of money," said Mrs. Howe. "And yet it is the most expensive education, usually, that is the least valuable."

"I had this fact brought home to me a short time ago. I was visiting a certain family, and one morning at breakfast the father said, as he handed his son, a sophomore, a $10 bill:—

"Your studies are costing me a great deal."

"I know it, father," the son answered, "and I don't study very hard either."
