The Old-Fashioned Garden.

The old-fashioned garden was widely different from the imitations of it, constructed from directions in handbooks. To borrow Lowell's apt comparison:

They're no more like than 'barnets' nests an' hives, Or printed sermons be to holy lives.

The very essential of the old-fashioned garden was that it should be made and tended by a woman. "The men folks" in the early days had no time for "puttering round" the flower garden. The plow and the harrow were unknown there. The spade was the substitute for both, and the dressing was brought in an unsteady wheelbarrow, often surreptitiously, from barn-yard or hen-coop.

The laboriously artificial "tangle" of the present day was the natural state of that garden. Never was there so fragrant and so luxuriant a wilderness. The mere names of the blossoms make a charmed catalogue of the joys of the sight and the smell. There was the spicy southernwood—suggestive to many a memory of sleepy Sunday afternoons in country meeting-houses, where a sprig of it, held between warm, childish fingers, mingled its odor with the sermon and the dream. There was the shy lady's delights, miniature pansies, looking like the quaint children of the time.

Butter-and-eggs grew rankly and forced its way under the fence palings, to make gay the roadside with its yellow and white abundance. Sweet-williams and prince's feather and cockcomb made a fine corner with their vigorous reds.

A damp spot near the cellar wall, where a leaky drain would be today suspected, was utilized for the graceful, tall blossoms of the flower-de-luce. Spice pinks and the gilly-flowers were friendly rivals in perfume, and rose-geraniums flourished with a vigor which made their stems almost like those of a woody shrub.

But the roses! No new-fangled hybrids in those gardens, but great cabbage roses, their petals gathered for the savory "rose water," a "flavoring" dear to our grandmothers, and close beside them the white Scotch roses, their outer leaves veined with pink, and their odor the sweetest and rarest that ever ravished human sense. With the cinnamon rose, that bandit among roses, our grandmothers waged a constant war, in behalf of their less vigorous favorites.

Of them all, the queen, crowned and throned, was the noble blush rose—as graceful as she was delicate, as stately as she was fair. No product of hothouse and skilled gardener is fit to hold a candle to her beauty—as it shines in the Garden of Memory. For, alas! it is to that mysterious land that most of us must journey when we long for the sight of an old-fashioned garden.

The Spirit of Hospitality.

In the hill country of northern Virginia a tourist who was making a long trip on horseback halted one noon before a log house which he at first took to be a stable. An old man was seated on a log near the door. An emaciated mule stood with its head half way inside the window. No sign of smoke issued from the tumble-down chimney.

The tourist made inquiry concerning the mountain roads and was on the point of asking if he could get a meal for himself and his horse, when the owner of the shanty said, "Stranger, I'd like mighty well to invite you to dinner, but I reckon ye wouldn't relish cold hoe cake and greens."

The rider was about to say anything would be acceptable when the old man continued: "I'd like to feed that horse of yours, but my old mule there's got to browse mighty fine to keep on her legs this fall."

The stranger explained that he would be glad to pay for anything that could be obtained.

The Adaptability of Joseph.

He was a little sawed-off runt, with patches on his clothes. He had a cowlick on his head and freckles on his nose. He was no good at lessons, for he always hated books. He quite preferred the mystery of angle worms and hooks.

While other fellows cottoned down to wisdom's proxy way, Joe used to pound an old baseball, and keep it up all day. You'd always find that little runt, so full of grit and sand, Go dragging everywhere with him a ball club in his hand.

I guess he used to sleep with it, he seemed to love it so. For everywhere that ball club went along went runty Joe. And so he kept it up for years until he was the king. High money-monk among us all, and quite the proper thing.

One of the chaps a merchant is, his business is dull; And one's a minister, who has to keep six small mouths full; And one's a lawyer without briefs; another is a clerk Who measures ribbons in a store, and has to hump and work.

They have to hustle for the stuff, those fellows who were wise; But Joe, the little stub and twist, he seems to yank the prize.

He's easy as he used to be, contented, full of cheer— He'll get three thousand plunkers just to play baseball this year.

Wire rope has been considered a modern invention, but recent excavation at Pompeii has unearthed a piece of wire rope an inch in diameter and about fifteen feet long. The rope is made of strands, each containing fifteen wires twisted together, and the strands are twisted upon one another exactly as in modern cordage.

A Keeper of the Sabbath.

The Rev. V. B. Carroll, a Southern clergyman, tells the following story: "We were driving out one Sunday from Decatur, when we came upon a negro with a club in his hand and a freshly killed 'possum on his shoulder. We stopped to examine his prize, and the colonel said:

"My friend, do you know it is Sunday?"

"Sartin, boss."

"Are you a religious man?"

"I are. I'se jist on my way home from church."

"And what sort of religion have you got that permits you to go hunting on Sunday?"

"Religion? Religion?" queried the man, as he held the 'possum up with one hand and scratched his head with the other. "Does you 'spect any black man in Alabama is gwine to tie himself up to any religion dat 'lows a 'possum to walk right across the road ahead of him an' git away free? No, sah! A religion which won't bend a little when a fat 'possum heads you off couldn't be 'established 'round yere by all the preachers in the universe."

Neuralgia
of the Heart.

An Ailment Which Terrifies its Victims—Indicated by Pains about the Heart and Quick, Loud Breathing—Cured by

Dr Chase's Nerve Food.

It is quite natural to be alarmed when the heart becomes affected, but there is no reason to despair of being cured.

The great majority of heart derangements are due to exhaustion of the nerves and a watery condition of the blood. By overcoming these causes of trouble with the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, the heart will be restored to health and its action again become normal.

Mr. James G. Clark, Fosterville, York County, N. B., writes:—"I have been a great sufferer from what the doctors said was neuralgia of the heart. The pain started in the back of the neck and worked down into the region of the heart. Though I had taken a lot of medicine of one kind and another, I could not get anything to help me until I used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

"When I began this treatment I could not rest in bed, except by sitting upright, on account of the dreadful pains about the heart and the quick, loud beating. The change which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has made in my condition is wonderful. It has entirely overcome these symptoms and is making me strong and well. If this statement will help to relieve the suffering of others, you are at liberty to use it."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cents a box, six boxes for $2.50 at all dealers, or Edman-son, Bates & Co., Toronto. To protect you against imitations, the portrait and signature of Dr. A. W. Chase, the famous receipt book author, are on every box.

"When I am going anywhere I don't wait for a star; I hitch my cart to anything going my way," was the explanation which a Chicago reformer once gave for accepting appointment as civil service commissioner under a mayor who believed in the spoils system. This is a pretty good rule for reformers in other parts of the country to follow.
